Dear Reflections Staff,

I got my copy of Reflections in the mail today. I wanted to say what an excellent edition it was. Having read a million of them in the alumni office, I'll safely say that I think this was the best edition yet. The formatting was slick and the content was excellent.

I'm a believer in letting folks know when they do a great job, so pass along my gratitude and appreciation to the whole staff. Keep doing what you do!

In Him and Forever Blue, Kyle Bullock ('13)

Thank you for the Reflections! It affirms what I see at LCU now: a strong representation of women in leadership and scholarship, and an intentional effort toward greater diversity. LCU's heart is still inclusive, but its publishing record and its research is certainly at a much higher level! I'm so proud to be an LCU grad.

Emily (Young '62) Lemley

This last issue of Reflections was the best yet. It was very visually appealing, it made me want to keep reading.

LCU 2020: Envisioning Our Future

Fifty-eight years is not very old when it comes to colleges and universities, especially when you consider the fact that the oldest institutions of higher learning in the United States are approaching 400 years of age. As Lubbock Christian University concludes its 58th year, it's a good opportunity to pause and reflect briefly on the LCU story—past, present, and future.

Our story is marked by vision, sacrifice, and faithfulness. It is filled with men and women of faith who believed and committed their lives and resources to advancing the university's mission. It is a story of changed lives. It is a story of growth and determination and sustained excellence.

During the course of the last couple of years, the LCU community has been exploring fundamental questions about the university's identity and purpose. As we look ahead to the year 2020 and beyond, we have sought to envision our future and unleash our imaginations while striving to fulfill the university's great promise. It has been a significant moment in the life of the university, and in the weeks and months ahead you will be hearing much more about LCU 2020 and our plans and priorities for the future.

As part of the process, we sought to articulate the university's values, those aspects of our institutional character that are cornerstones of our identity.

We seek to be authentically Christian, guided by our Christian faith in every dimension of our life as a community of higher learning.

This commitment to Christ-centeredness has been the central animating idea of the university from its beginning. Indeed, in October of 1957, only a month after the college welcomed its first students, founding president F. W. Mattox spoke at the inaugural Bible Lectures hosted on campus. In his address, "Our Hopes for Lubbock Christian College," he declared: "It is our only purpose to render a service in regard to the spiritual lives of young people. . . . [F]or if it were not for its spiritual aims [the college] would have no right to exist."

Today, nearly six decades later, the vision is alive, and every day we seek to strengthen our Christian identity as we work to more fully realize the university's founding vision.

In this issue of Reflections, we share stories about the distinctive, life-changing impact of LCU, including the remarkable success of our undergraduate research program, the significant contributions and achievements of our alumni, the extraordinary impact of our student athletes in raising funds for the Make-A-Wish program, and the compelling story of the first student to be baptized in our newly dedicated Fountains on the Mall.

In his 1957 address, Dr. Mattox said: "This is going to be a great Christian college because it is building on a firm foundation. . . . We believe that with the grace of the Lord these desires will actually become realities."

These words are just as true today as when first uttered. As we look ahead to 2020 and beyond, we do so with confidence in the one from whom all blessings flow.

LUBBOCK CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

Lubbock Christian University's history rests on the stirring vision and faithful service of its "modern pioneers." The university's story is anchored in God's providence. Much has changed in the 58 years since the university's founding, but LCU remains steadfastly committed to Christian higher education and its mission of changing lives. This statement of Mission, Vision, and Identity and Values will serve as guideposts as the university navigates the future.

During the course of the last two years, the university community—board members, faculty, staff, students, and alumni—spent time in conversation about its purpose, identity, and priorities. The statements that follow are the result of this deeply collaborative process.

I. OUR MISSION

Lubbock Christian University is a Christ-centered, academic community of learners, transforming the hearts, minds, and hands of students for lives of purpose and service.

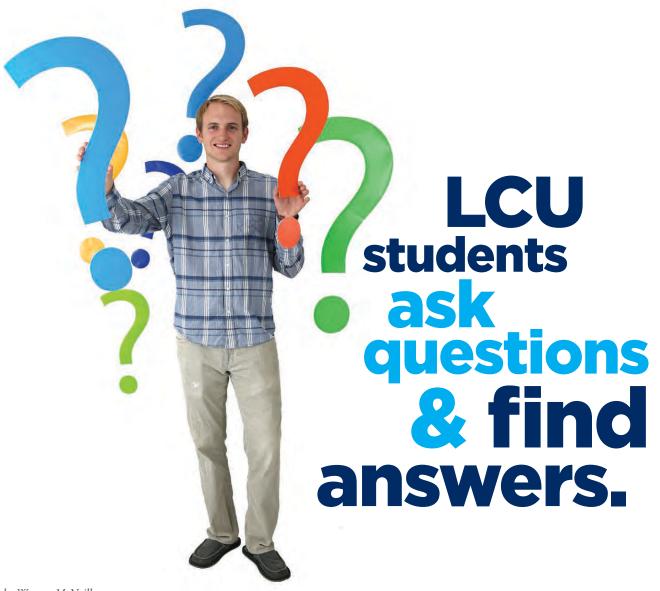

II. OUR VISION

Lubbock Christian University will be a leading Christian university, known for its academic excellence and its commitment to faith that seeks understanding, where wisdom is pursued, vocation is discerned, and service is fostered.

III. OUR IDENTITY AND VALUES

We seek to be authentically Christian, guided by our Christian faith in every dimension of our life as a community of higher learning.

- We are committed to students, passionately seeking to provide a transformative educational experience.
- We are scholars and co-discoverers, guided by Christian wisdom while diligently seeking the truth in every discipline.
- We are a welcoming community, embodying a spirit of hospitality in every aspect of our life together.
- We are thoughtfully engaged, committed to serving as agents, models, and witnesses of the Kingdom of God in our families, churches, and communities.
- We pursue the highest standards of excellence, "working with all our hearts, as working for the Lord," and seeking to glorify God in everything we do.
- We act with integrity, striving to discern right from wrong, speaking the truth, and keeping our commitments.
- We treat others with dignity and respect, valuing each person as one made in God's image.

Hannah Sutton transferred to LCU in the middle of her freshman year because she wanted to become a Bible major.

She felt a connection with the LCU Bible Department. "It seemed a bit more personal and better suited to me," says Hannah.

Shortly after she arrived on campus, she learned about the growing number of undergraduate LCU students who were doing original research with the help of faculty mentors. Something sparked inside of her when she heard fellow Biblical studies major James Masterson ('14) asking the question, "What if I could determine whether summer ministry internships were really effective?"

"What if I could determine whether summer ministry internships were really effective?"

Hannah heard James present the findings of his original research, "The Effectiveness of Short Term Intensive Youth and Family Ministry Internships," at the annual LCU Scholars Colloquium. It was through that experience that she learned she could pursue her own answers to some of her "what if" questions. Seeing fellow students conducting original research into real-world issues gave Hannah the confidence she needed to become a part of the undergraduate research initiative at LCU.

Hannah then approached Dr. Stephen Bonner, one of her Bible professors, and he agreed to be her faculty mentor for her research project.

But the LCU story of undergraduate research really starts much earlier.

Julie (Maxcey) Marshall never saw herself as a researcher. She graduated from LCU in 1989 with a degree in elementary education and began to teach in Lubbock. A short while later, LCU dean and biology professor Dr. Gary Estep, who had known Marshall all her life, recruited her to do part-time work in the chemistry lab.

That simple invitation changed the course of Marshall's life and opened the door for LCU undergraduate research for so many others.

After working with Estep, Marshall decided to go back to school to get her chemistry degree and eventually earned her Ph.D. in chemistry from Texas Tech University in 2001. She joined the faculty at LCU teaching general chemistry and biochemistry. In 2003, Marshall was encouraged to submit a proposal to do some research for J. Leek and Associates. The next year, she received funding for a three-year grant for research into three specific questions that were a part of her proposal.

Marshall immediately began looking for LCU students who would be interested in helping with this research. She knew God was at work in this process and blessing her efforts with these first three students, Matt Joyner ('05), Kolbyn Joy ('07), and Amanda (Ellis '06) Boston, and that effort gave birth to LCU's undergraduate research program. Marshall states, "All three of these inaugural undergraduate researchers went on to obtain a Ph.D. in science, showing their aptitude and work ethic in the lab and classroom. I also saw them as disciplined, mature, Godly young people."

"All three of these inaugural undergraduate researchers went on to obtain a Ph.D. in science, showing their aptitude and work ethic in the lab and classroom. I also saw them as disciplined, mature, Godly young people."

"Starting from scratch was a bit scary, because we had to change the culture on campus," says Dr. Marshall. "I knew it was the right thing to do, because I began to see the relationship between me and these students was different. LCU faculty are known for taking personal interest in the education and lives of their students, but this was deeper. Because we were working together to answer a specific question, the walls between professor and student came down, and we were just minds working together to find answers."

After a year or so, the undergraduate research project grew beyond a point where Dr. Marshall could effectively mentor the number of student researchers involved. Lucy Porter, an adjunct professor of microbiology, came alongside to become the second faculty mentor for undergraduate research at LCU. Dr. Marshall said, "I figured out very quickly that Lucy was a true mentor, caring for students in an even richer and deeper way than I was able, so we were able to amplify what we were doing with the students."

Dr. Marshall was awarded another research grant in 2007 and more research projects were developed for students. But all of the research at that point was still in the sciences.

"We were a nexus, and several things began to converge from 2006 to 2011," indicated Dr. Marshall. The Scholars Colloquium, a campus-wide opportunity for original research to be presented to student and faculty peers, began at the initiative of the University Honors Program. Faculty members who started the colloquium were Dr. Jim Bullock (former LCU faculty member and former director of the University Honors Program), Dr. Kregg Fehr, associate professor of history and Honors Coordinator for Humanities, and Dr. Jesse Long, Dean of the College of Biblical Studies and Behavioral Sciences.

The Institutional Review Board (IRB) was created to review the use of human subjects in any LCU research endeavor. The Playa Lake Study began, with a multi-year project composed of numerous independent but related research projects. This study and other scholarly initiatives were indicative of a campus-wide cultural shift that promoted undergraduate research and deeper scholarship.

Sarah Mannon presenting her research on the effects of socialization across the lifespan.

In the spring of 2010 Lucy Porter, Dr. Susan Blassingame, and Dr. Andy Lauglin took a few students to the National Conference for Undergraduate Research (NCUR), which is considered to be the very best and most comprehensive conference for students doing research at the undergraduate level.

Samantha Lack ('12)

"It was at NCUR that we determined this should be done by all disciplines—undergrad research could go across the entire campus," said Porter. All academic disciplines, including those in nonscientific fields, began to create opportunities for students to engage in research opportunities utilizing both quantitative and qualitative research methods. Students across the university were encouraged to think critically about the "what ifs" in their respective academic areas.

This past March, LCU students submitted their proposals for a chance to present at the NCUR, held this year at Eastern Washington University. Twenty-three LCU students were invited to present, with just over half of the LCU student presentations in academic disciplines outside of the sciences, a clear indication that LCU is producing original research and depth of scholarship all across campus.

This year, the NCUR honored LCU by naming the university to its honor roll of 57 universities from across the nation who are leading the way in undergraduate research.

When asked about how undergraduate research is benefitting LCU students, Dr. Marshall indicated that it enhances students' critical thinking skills and lifts their confidence. "One of our shyest and most reserved students stepped out of his comfort zone at NCUR. The student sought out and talked with a professor from another university, whom he did not know, about the commonalities of the research they were each conducting independently. I'm convinced he would have never done that before he became involved in undergraduate research," Dr. Marshall said excitedly. "And we even had another student approached about having their research published."

Hannah Sutton and Logan Adams, both honors students, were two of the students who presented at NCUR. Back at LCU, these two students were chosen from among their peers to be the two presenters featured in the student plenary session of the annual LCU Scholars Colloquium. Hannah received the award for best qualitative research for her presentation, "Paying for Pandora from the Pews: Comparing Women's Views of God in the Churches of Christ," and Adam received the best quantitative research award with his presentation on "Detection of Genes Encoding Shiga Toxin in Antibiotic Resistant E. coli Isolated from Urban Playa Lakes and the Feces of Canada Geese and Resident Waterfowl."

When asked what they learned by being involved in undergraduate research, Hannah responded, "I've always been a persistent person, but doing this research has taught me to follow through. If you have a passion you need to pursue it. There are multiple ways to accomplish a task. Research has taught me to ask questions about processes, taught me to be more creative. Research has taught me to think things through, to think critically."

She continued, "Dr. Bonner taught me so much. He took time to pray with me about this research. Every time we would meet to discuss my research, our meeting began with prayer. I don't think I will ever be able to do research again without prayer being first and foremost as a part of the process."

"Dr. Marshall taught us to persevere to not give up."

Logan said being involved in research had taught him that, "when faced with obstacles that really seemed insurmountable, or when it seemed our pursuit of answers through research had failed, Dr. Marshall would encourage me to look at the results in a different way—not as a failed attempt, but to glean some information from those results. We would take a step back, observe what process had brought us to this point, and then determine alternative steps that might provide a different direction in order to move past what had seemed an impossibility. She taught us to persevere—to not give up."

All LCU students are given the opportunity to be paired with a faculty mentor and to do original research to find the answers to the "what if" questions that fit their disciplines and passions. As more of them participate in such research, LCU is truly experiencing a positive cultural shift as professors and students become co-discoverers in the quest for answers to real-world, real-life questions.

"Undergraduate research allows students to work side-byside with faculty mentors," says Dr. Marshall. "At LCU, faculty routinely publish scholarly work, but we don't have the pressure to publish at the same rate as someone at a research university, so we can concentrate on the student during the process. It gives the student tremendous confidence, whatever field they go into, and it creates a lasting bond between the mentor and the student. Working side-by-side makes you colleagues; you are beyond professor and student."

Many of the memories are also "falling off" the whole of the portrait, depicting memories forgotten and an identity broken.

The materials used in each of these works draw inspiration from the underlying theme of fragmented memories that we construct into a whole. Thus, many "construction" tools are used, from plywood to screws. Also, many parts of the works appear to be left rough or unfinished in order to better emphasize the idea that present, living identities are often a construction of memories past.

My artwork is strongly influenced by personal experience, for I have found that who I view myself to presently be is often strongly dictated upon who I have been - the person I see in my memories. In many cases, my identity is shaped and wrought with memories of my past. These memories always live in us, but sometimes we choose to live in them. - Leah Price ('15)

LCU students changing lives in Washington D.C.

Kara Stephenson ('15), an major, graduated this spring from LCU. A focused student, active social club member, Student Senate executive, and pioneer for Chap Radio in her four years at LCU, Kara never let an opportunity pass her by, including a four-month internship in Washington, D.C. in the fall of 2014.

Through LCU's relationship with The Washington Center (TWC)—a program that finds advantageous internships and educational opportunities for students in the D.C. area—Kara and three other LCU students traveled to D.C. to live, work, and learn for a semester. Kara loved every minute living in D.C., but her experiences extended beyond the walls of her internship.

TWC helped place Kara at an organization called Back on My Feet (BoMF).

"To help teach and maintain soft skills—such as setting and meeting goals—we would run in the mornings with people experiencing homelessness," Kara said

"To help teach and maintain soft skills—such as setting and meeting goals—we would run in the mornings with people experiencing homelessness."

Kara, her coworkers, and other volunteers would wake up at 5 a.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays to run with some of the homeless population of Washington. The purpose of the run was not fitness, but rather to provide runners with skills, such as self-sufficiency and dedication, to help them succeed beyond the program.

After proving a certain level of commitment and dedication, BoMF members are afforded training opportunities as well as housing resources. Ideally, members of the organization use the skills and training provided by BoMF to gain independence so that they can support themselves. According to the BoMF website, 46 percent of members go on to transform their lives with a job, housing, or both.

"Running so early in the morning takes loyalty and passion for a good cause," Kara said. "Running beside these people and gaining insight into their world impacted my life as well."

Many of the people Kara met at BoMF were a blessing to her, but so were others that she met in D.C. and in the TWC program. Kara was exposed to the diversity of culture by living with roommates from Brazil, South Korea, and Iowa. The wide variety of culture affected the entire apartment—for instance, cleaning the kitchen became a more complicated task when everyone had a different idea of how the cleaning should be done.

"I met people from all over the world, which is not something you always experience in West Texas," Kara explains. "You change drastically in such a different culture, and that becomes your new routine. When I came back, people in Lubbock were constant, but I was a new person."

Washington interns with a "Back on My Feet" participant.

Kara notes that the interns at TWC cycle out every semester, but the runners at BoMF will stay in the city, as they continue the transition from homelessness to independence and stability. She knew that keeping connected with either her fellow interns or the BoMF runners could prove difficult. But in her last week in D.C., in the midst of stress and packing and tying up loose ends, Kara ran to CVS and encountered someone who made her internship experience worth it. One of the BoMF runners, whom she had known since the beginning of her internship, had gotten a job at that particular CVS location.

"That was one of the most rewarding experiences, knowing that my work at Back on My Feet could make a difference, even in one person's life. To see him in a job? Working? That is what my time in D.C. was all about."

"That was one of the most rewarding experiences, knowing that my work at Back on My Feet could make a difference, even in one person's life. To see him in a job? Working? That is what my time in D.C. was all about," Kara said.

After returning home, Kara was a changed person in all aspects of her life. Because of her experiences, she encourages others to take the same leap of faith that she did: "Believe it or not, we're not all from West Texas. There are other beliefs and ideas out there. I will always have my strong faith, but I have grown more open to listening to where others are coming from. Some students at LCU may be struggling with the next step, or what they want to do with their lives, and I strongly recommend the LCU Washington program. I took a leap of faith, and I was rewarded with a great experience. I threw myself into the unknown, and I came out stronger."

HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE SPRING

JANUARY

The first Blur (student worship experience) of the spring semester featured speaker Dean Barham, senior minister at the Woodmont Hills Church in Nashville. Josh Kasinger, worship leader at Bammel Church of Christ in Houston and LCU's Best Friends group led worship.

The LCU campus now has a Starbucks at the entrance to the university library. A dedication and blessing ceremony was held to mark the opening of this new community space.

FEBRUARY

Kappa Phi Kappa took first place in the women's division of Master Follies.

Koinonia was the first place winner for the men's division.

Sub T-16 was awarded second place for the men's division, the B. Wayne Hinds Special Effects Award, and the People's Choice Award.

Lubbock Christian University welcomed the real-life heroes of Disney's latest blockbuster, "McFarland USA," on Tuesday, Feb. 17.

Jim "Blanco" White and wife, Cheryl, were joined by their daughters Tami (White '85) Wolfe, Julie (White '89) Tuttle, and Jamie (White '91) Bell.

The Whites spent the day on campus speaking about their experience of being portrayed in the film and meeting with the LCU community. Following a full day of events on campus, including speaking to local track and athletic teams, a special screening of the film was held at Cinemark Movies

16 in Lubbock with the Whites in attendance. Every seat was filled with LCU students, faculty, alumni, and friends. Following the film, Jim White held a short Q&A session, giving insight to the film and speaking about how certain scenes in the film differed from real life. Full story: LCU.edu/McFarland

Taylor Prather with Douglas Gresham

Douglas Gresham, author and stepson of C. S. Lewis, visited campus on March 26 as the special guest of LCU women's social club LOA and member Taylor Prather. Gresham is the co-producer of the film adaptations of "The Chronicles of Narnia" series and is the author of "Lenten Lands: My Childhood with Joy Davidman and C. S. Lewis" and "Jack's Life: The Life Story of C. S. Lewis."

The day began with Gresham addressing LCU students during chapel, where he touched on the importance of faith and the strength it takes to be a Christian. A Q&A session with Gresham was held in the Baker Conference Center, with LCU associate professor of English Dr. Kenneth Hawley facilitating. During this time, Gresham fielded questions about his life with C. S. Lewis, who he fondly refers to as Jack. He also shared the adventures of his life beyond the Lewis home.

Gresham explained that he has spent many years making sure that the works of Lewis are preserved and shared with the public. Gresham believes that Lewis would be pleased and amused that his legacy continues, not only through Gresham, but with the help of countless others. Full story: LCU.edu/DouglasGresham LCU hosted its first ever "Ready, Set, Blue!" event for new Chaps and their parents on April 20. The event allowed new students to acquaint themselves with each other and gave them the opportunity to register for classes. Next year's event is April 20, 2016.

LCU held its first 24-hour reading marathon of the New Testament on April 20. "The event came to fruition at the request of students," Dr. Susan Blassingame said. Readers took 30-minute shifts, taking time to pray with the next person on the list before switching shifts. The reading was stopped for a moment of prayer, song, and remembrance for the tragic event that had happened in Kenya days earlier resulting in the deaths of numerous university students.

Students presented various forms of research at the university's annual Scholar's Colloquium. This year's keynote speaker for the event was Dr. Daniel Bustillos ('98), assistant professor, Albert Gnaegi Center for Health Care Ethics, Saint Louis University. He holds a secondary appointment in the Saint Louis University School of Public Health.

In the final week of chapel, the "In Conclusion" talks were given by graduating seniors Hannah Sutton ('15), Daniel Whitefield ('15), and Lindsey Holt ('15). SUSAN BLASSINGAME

Dean of the Hancock College of Liberal Arts and Education

At the 2015 meeting of the Conference of College Teachers of English (CCTE), LCU Dean of the Hancock College of Liberal Arts and Education, Dr. Susan Blassingame, was awarded the 2015 Frances Hernández Scholar-Teacher Award, which is a lifetime achievement award given each year to a university English professor who manifests excellence in teaching, scholarship, and service. Recipients receive an award of $1,000.

The CCTE Executive Council selects recipients from nominations made by colleagues within the nominee's university and from peers from universities throughout Texas. The nominations are based on a demonstrated dedication to the profession through outstanding teaching, service to CCTE, university, and other professional organizations, and both academic and scholarly achievement.

KENNETH HAWLEYAssociate Professor of English

The officers of the International Boethius Society voted unanimously to appoint Dr. Kenneth Hawley as co-editor of Carmina Philosophiae: Journal of the International Boethius Society.

Dr. Hawley will serve with Noel Harold Kaylor, Jr. of Troy University. This annual, peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary journal is devoted to the study of Boethius, his age, and his influence. The 2014 issue of the journal—guest edited by Joseph McMullen and Erica Weaver (Harvard University)—will feature selections from "Revisiting the Legacy of Boethius in the Middle Ages," a conference co-sponsored by the International Boethius Society and hosted at Harvard in March 2014.

Dr. Hawley is working now on the 2015 volume and continues to serve as editor of the society's online newsletter: Boethius.blogspot.com.

CATHY BOX Associate Professor of Education

Cathy Box completed a Ph.D. in curriculum and instruction with a specialization in math and science education from Texas Tech University in 2008 and a master's degree in Multidisciplinary Science from Texas Tech University in 2003. She is certified to teach grades 6-12 science. Dr. Box taught high school biology and middle school science in the Tahoka

Independent School District before coming to Lubbock Christian University in 2008. She currently serves as an associate professor and the program coordinator for secondary education in the School of Education. She is the president of TISD's Board of Trustees, an active member at the Tahoka Church of Christ, and serves as an assessment consultant for area schools. Her area of specialization is formative assessment or assessment for learning.

ANDY LAUGHLIN Associate Professor of Natural Sciences

Dr. Andy Laughlin is an associate professor and chair of the Department of Natural Sciences and has been teaching at LCU for ten years. He obtained his B.S. in animal science from Texas A&M University, an M.S. in animal science from Angelo State University, and a Ph.D. in physiology of reproduction in the animal science department from Texas A&M University.

Dr. Laughlin teaches human and animal anatomy and physiology and animal science, and leads a medical mission trip to Peru every May. He mentors undergraduate students in research and serves as the faculty coordinator for the pre-vet club on campus. Outside of the LCU community, Dr. Laughlin coaches youth baseball, is a member of South Plains Church of Christ, and judges sheep and goat shows across the state of Texas.

Four New Members of Board of Trustees Announced

Three distinguished alumni of Lubbock Christian University have returned home to join their alma mater's Board of Trustees, and they are joined by a highly respected member of the federal judiciary.

The new additions include Judge James O. Browning, Rhonda Rhodes ('77), Alan Rhodes ('80), and Quentin Mimms ('83).

President Tim Perrin commented:

"We are most fortunate to add these four extraordinarily successful individuals to the Board of Trustees. They each bring a deep commitment to Christian higher education and a profound understanding of LCU's distinctive mission. I look forward to working with them as together we seek to advance the university."

Judge Browning

Judge Browning obtained his bachelor's degree in Political Science from Yale University in 1978, followed by a Juris Doctorate degree from the University of Virginia School of Law in 1981. Following law school he clerked for Justice Lewis F. Powell on the United States Supreme Court. Judge Browning practiced law in New Mexico in both private and public settings before his appointment to the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico in 2003 by President George W. Bush. Judge Browning has twice been named Outstanding Federal Jurist (2009 and 2013) by the New Mexico chapter of the American Board of Trial Advocates. He is married to Jan. and they have three children. Jacob, Eli, and Elizabeth ('06), and two grandchildren. They attend the Montgomery Church of Christ in Albuquerque.

Rhonda Rhodes

Rhonda Rhodes is a 1977 alumna of Lubbock Christian University, graduating with a Bachelor of Science degree in Education. She received her M.Ed. from Eastern New Mexico University in 1981, and her J.D. from Texas Tech University School of Law in 1988. She is a partner in the law firm of Williams & Rhodes, LLP in Englewood, CO. Rhonda also serves on the board of the LCU Foundation. She started the Rhodes to Relief charity, through which she and others build homes together in Mexico with Missions Ministries. Rhonda, who attends the University Church of Christ in Denver, is married to Terry Howard, and has one daughter, Ragan, who lives in Lubbock.

Alan Rhodes

Alan Rhodes is a 1980 graduate of LCU, where he earned a Bachelor of Science degree in accounting. He received his J.D. degree from Texas Tech University School of Law in 1983. Alan is the President of Underwood Attorneys at Law in Amarillo, Texas, where he lives with his wife, Robyn (Baker '79), who is also an LCU graduate. Alan and Robyn have one son, Kregg, two daughters, Katherine (Rhodes) Parks and Jenna Lea, and two granddaughters. Alan is very active in the Amarillo community, having served as president of more than a half-dozen area non-profits and service organizations. Alan also serves on the board of the LCU Foundation, and is a member of the Colonies Church of Christ.

Quentin Mimms graduated from LCU in 1983 with a Bachelor of Science degree in accounting. He received his MBA from Rice University in 1986 and is a licensed CPA. He is a partner at Alvarez and Marsal, a business consulting firm in Dallas, Texas, specializing in forensic accounting. Quentin has been retained as an expert witness in litigated matters across the country. Quentin was named LCU's Outstanding Young Alumnus in 1993. Quentin and wife Sally have three children - Rachel, Kevin, and current student Sam, and one grandchild. The Mimms attend the McDermott Road Church of Christ, where Quentin serves as an elder.

LCU FOUNDATION PRESLDENT

AL ROBERTS has been named President of the LCU Foundation.

President Tim Perrin stated, "Al Roberts is the right person at the right time to lead the LCU Foundation. I am indebted to Dr. Ken Jones for providing such strong leadership of the Foundation during the course of the past year and look forward to working with Al to advance the university's mission."

"The foundation is a tool, an adjacent resource, which gives the university more flexibility. We share the mission and vision of the university, but provide a unique approach to secure resources for the support of LCU," Roberts said. "I am pleased to accept this appointment, and I am looking forward to working closely with President Perrin to help fully achieve the vision of the foundation."

Already, Roberts is developing ideas for future foundation initiatives. Some of Roberts' long-term goals include providing more options for scholarships, supporting students attending the LCU Washington internship program and working to accommodate the needs of athletics and extracurricular activities on campus.

Prior to working at LCU, Roberts worked for thirty years in telecommunications, occupying executive positions within Verizon, Qwest, and Century Link. He has been married for 35 years to his high-school sweetheart, Judy, and they have three children, Jon, Bryan ('01), and Abby. Though not an LCU alum himself, Roberts was drawn into the community when Bryan joined LCU as a student.

Roberts served on the LCU Board of Trustees for five years. Now, as president of the foundation, he looks forward to the opportunity to foster greater involvement by the LCU Foundation board.

"Al Roberts is the right person at the right time to lead the LCU Foundation."

LCU Family Weekend LCU.edu/FamilyWeekend

The Department of Fine Arts presents the musical, "The Boy Friend"

Tickets can be purchased after Sept. 1 at LCU.edu/tickets

The Jazz Age lives on in "The Boy Friend." a light romantic spoof of 1920's musical comedy. Set against the backdrop of the French Riviera, the English heiress, Polly, longs for only one thing: a boyfriend. Polly's father, convinced any boy who isn't wealthy will court Polly strictly for her financial situation, forbids her to engage any potential suitors. Honoring his wishes, Polly explains to Tony, the messenger boy with whom she's fallen in love, that she is no rich girl. This is just the tip of the mistaken identity iceberg as love proceeds to charmingly find its way through nearly every member of the cast and bring them all to a happy ending.

October 5-6

October 8-9

The University Honors Program will host a conference on "Truth and Reconciliation: Reflections on Justice and Peacebuilding from South Africa." The two-day event will feature presentations by Charles Villa-Vicencio, a leading global authority in matters related to transitional justice and reconciliation. Does the Bible Support SLAVERY

LECTURE BY DR. PETER J. WILLIAMS

Warden, Tyndale House, Cambridge & Affiliated Lecturer, University of Cambridge

Lubbock Christian University Campus TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2015 · 7:00 P.M.

"The issue of slavery is important today because there is so much trafficking going on, and because many Christians are confused about what the Bible teaches on slavery. As a result, they often have doubts about the validity of the Bible in this area.

I tend to find that moral objections to the Bible merely assume what they need to prove, but that does not mean that answering them is easy. Often an objection comes with rhetorical force gained from the assumptions of our culture, and those assumptions need to be challenged as part of a proper answer."

Bullard has served as a deacon at the Weber Road Church of Christ in Corpus Christi, Texas, and at the Bammel Road Church of Christ in Houston, Texas. Bullard and his wife, Patti, have two children and three grandchildren.

F.W. Mattox Award

Recognition of Excellence and Outstanding Service to the University

The Associates of LCU (1958-Present)

This very special organization, whose membership is comprised of alumnae and other women deserving of alumnae-by-choice recognition, has faithfully supported Lubbock Christian University since 1958.

As a result of their diligence, and individual and collective talents, the Associates have raised almost $3 million for LCU.

The Associates' commitment to student programming has expanded the opportunities for hands-on academic training. They have also been the moving force in renovation of various student spaces through their 57-plus year history with the university: construction of the Home Economics Building during the 60s, which is now home to a vibrant Behavioral Sciences area; renovation of the historic Arnett House, which served as the first administration building for the university and now serves as home to the LCU Associates; the remodeling of Johnson Hall and refurbishment of Katie Rogers Hall, as well as numerous other smaller projects during the years that have resulted in enhancement of student community spaces.

Young Alumna of the Year Elizabeth Ryan ('02)

Attorney and Commissioner
New Mexico Game and Fish Commission

Elizabeth (Atkinson) Ryan graduated summa cum laude from LCU with a B.A. in Humanities (emphasis in pre-law). She received her J.D. cum laude from Texas Tech University School of Law, where she served as the Executive Student Writing Editor for the Law Review.

Beth is a respected attorney in New Mexico, specializing in oil and gas matters, including title examination, transactions, operations and regulatory. She partnered with Joel M. Carson, III in Roswell, N.M., creating Carson Ryan LLC after her energy practice grew at a rapid pace in 2012 and 2013. Prior to that, Ryan practiced oil and gas law in some of the top oil and gas law firms in the Rocky Mountains.

In January 2011, Governor Susana Martinez appointed Ryan to New Mexico's Environmental Improvement Board (EIB), where she served as Board Secretary until the end of her four year appointment. In January 2015, the governor appointed Beth to the post of Commissioner, New Mexico Game and Fish Commission. She has since received Senate confirmation. Beth is an active member of Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico. She is also a published author on issues ranging from appellate review to oil and gas topics. Beth and her husband, Zack ('02), have two children.

As Lubbock Christian University began its transition into the NCAA, the LCU Student-Athlete Advisory Committee (SAAC) decided to go above and beyond the NCAA's requirement that the school raise at least $600 for the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

Instead, the committee set its sights on raising at least $8,000, and by the end of the 2014 fall semester had more than $11,000 in hand.

Fundraising efforts were spearheaded by SAAC and its president, senior volleyball player Amy Edwards. Student athletes and coaches worked Texas Tech football games, hosted golf tournaments, received donations, and held a trunk-or-treat on campus for the bulk of funds needed.

When asked about the fundraising efforts, Edwards said that the entire process was enjoyable and shed a new light on the generosity of LCU's community.

Isabel Arteaga, who has been diagnosed with lymphangioma, wished to go to the Aulani Disney Resort in Hawaii.

"It amazed me about LCU's community. I've been a part of the community for years, but I never understood how willing everyone was to be a contributor. It made my heart more open to people wanting to help and getting involved," Edwards said.

Although LCU raised more than the $8,000 required to grant a wish by the end of the fall semester, it took a little over four months to match a Make-A-Wish child in the Lubbock area. Edwards said she and other student athletes feared they wouldn't find a child in time to see the wish granted before the end of the school year. But God opened the right door at the right time.

That door allowed 12-year-old Isabel Arteaga, who has been diagnosed with lymphangioma, to be introduced to Edwards and the SAAC members as a "rush wish," a wish that is granted over a matter of days rather than months. Once Edwards received word that Isabel would be the wish recipient, intense planning began. Isabel's wish granter, Henry Ramos, explained that it was Isabel's wish to go to the Aulani Disney Resort in Hawaii. Isabel's mother, Sara Cantu, said Isabel first saw the resort advertised on the Disney Channel. From that moment Isabel was intent on visiting the resort, and the student athletes were going to make that happen.

Edwards and SAAC planned to reveal the fulfillment of Isabel's wish during LCU's chapel ceremony on March 23. In order to keep the ceremony a surprise, Isabel's mother told her daughter she was coming to campus to be an advocate for Make-A-Wish and bring awareness to its cause.

Instead, Edwards brought Isabel onstage and revealed that her wish was being granted, much to Isabel's delight.

She was draped in a grass skirt while LCU's a cappella group Best Friends serenaded her with a Hawaiian rendition of Justin Bieber's "Baby."

Not only did the event make Isabel's dreams come true, but it also left a lasting impact on the LCU campus.

"I saw many people get excited about the process and want to get involved. The student body was very supportive of this goal and of Isabel when she arrived, and many wanted to meet her. This reveal makes me hopeful in the fact that we are able to make someone's dream come true, and that the student body will be very supportive of this endeavor in the future," said LCU women's golf player and SAAC member Shanae Ammons.

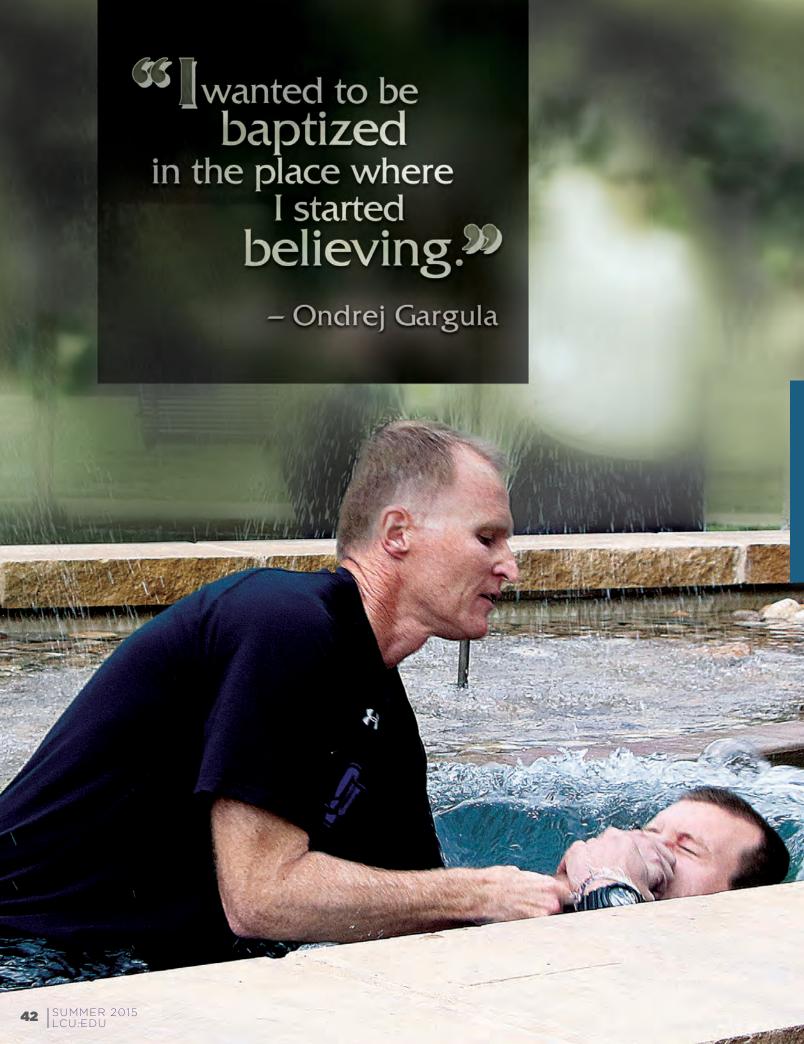

When asked about their trip to Hawaii, Isabel's mother had nothing but good news to report. Sara said Isabel chose this destination so that she could share her wish with her family. While in Hawaii, Isabel had the chance to go sightseeing, to meet various Disney characters such as Mickey and Minnie Mouse, and to play in the lazy river. In fact, Sara said Isabel had such a good time that she slept for two days after the family returned to their home.

As for future Make-A-Wish reveals, Edwards said that SAAC and fellow LCU student athletes hope to grant not one, but two wishes in the years to come.

On Tuesday, May 6, Lubbock Christian University junior Ondrej Gargula became the first person to be baptized in the new Fountains on the Mall baptistry. The recently dedicated fountains help to beautify the mall area and improve the university's ecofriendly initiative, but most importantly serve as a gathering place for prayer or fellowship on campus. The fountains, located at the heart of the LCU campus, include a baptistry. True to the purpose, hundreds of people gathered at the fountains to witness Ondrej's baptism and welcome him into the family of Christ. Ondrej's baptism marks the first of many spiritual rebirths that will occur in the campus fountains.

An international student from the Czech Republic, LCU was not Ondrej's initial choice for school. However, when he was asked to join the LCU men's basketball team, he jumped at the chance. Now the university has become a second home to him. Most importantly, LCU has been a place for Ondrej to learn about and seek God.

Fountains on the Mall

Many people had an influence on Ondrej's spiritual walk, including students, faculty, and administration. Conversations about God with his friends and girlfriend had always interested him, but Ondrej's Christian Heritage class with LCU professor Dr. Jeff Cary ('95) really kickstarted his search for Christ. Eventually, he found a spiritual mentor in LCU Board of Trustees member Dr. Kenneth Stephenson ('86). The two met while Dr. Stephenson's son, Aaron, played alongside Ondrej on the LCU men's basketball team.

Dr. Stephenson recalls that even when Ondrej first arrived at LCU, he was noticeably intrigued by Christ. "I was told that he was recording the glow stick devotional during freshman orientation on his phone because he had never experienced anything like that before. I started praying for him right then."

At the beginning of his sophomore year, Ondrej agreed to study the Bible with Dr. Stephenson. During the last week of school, after two semesters of studying, he decided to follow the gospel and take on Christ through baptism.

Since Ondrej was returning to the Czech Republic in two weeks, he planned to be baptized on LCU campus, the place where he began believing in Christ. To Ondrej, the fountains were the obvious choice after the profound impact LCU had on his life and spiritual walk. As to who should perform the baptism, that was another obvious choice for Ondrej: Dr. Kenneth Stephenson. After his important role in Ondrej's life – guiding Ondrej on his spiritual walk and regularly studying the Word with him – Ondrej wanted Dr. Stephenson to play an important role as he began his new life.

"I felt like this would be a good way to thank him for all of the things he has done for me and how much he has helped me," Ondrej said.

Dr. Stephenson was very grateful to be included in such a special moment of Ondrej's life. The baptism was a life-changing event for both of them.

"It was a joy and a privilege to take his confession and baptize him in the new beautiful fountains and baptistry on the mall of the LCU campus," Dr. Stephenson said, marveling at Ondrej's new dedication to his faith.

Already, in addition to the impact of his choice on the hundreds of people present at his baptism, he has been witnessing to thousands of people through social media, his voice reaching all around the world. Ondrej has taken a bold step in a new direction for his life and has taken his new calling to heart.

Ondrej will always remember the experience of being born in Christ at LCU, surrounded by the support of so many members of his new Christian family. "It was just something amazing, and there is nothing to compare it with," he said.

The morning long celebration included two former LCU presidents, Dr. Steven Lemley and Dr. Ken Jones, honoring and giving insight into the history and work done by the LCU Associates.

"We are celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Arnett House's 1915 construction and we are recognizing the LCU Associates who have made this old historic house a beautiful and useful landmark for our campus, our city, and our region." Dr. Lemley, LCU president 1982-1993

Following chapel, associates and members of the LCU and Lubbock community as well as the Lubbock media gathered on the Arnett House lawn to celebrate its designation as a historical landmark by the State of Texas Historical Commission. A ribbon cutting, City of Lubbock special recognition, and unveiling of the landmark were held with an open house following the events.

Lubbock Mayor Pro Tem, Jim Gerlt, read and presented the associates with a Special Proclamation from the City of Lubbock as Associates president Jan Crockett looks on.

ARNETT HOUSE

FIRST BUILT AS A WEDDING GIFT FOR J. LANHAM AND GLENN (PRATT) HIGGINBOTHAM IN 1915, THE ARNETT HOUSE BECAME THE LONGTIME HOME OF THE FAMILY OF SAM C. AND ALICE (FORD) ARNETT, PIONEER RANCHER AND BANKER. FOR DECADES, ARNETT SERVED AS A MAJOR BUSINESSMAN AND LEADER IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF LUBBOCK. IN 1956, ARNETT PASSED AWAY, AND HIS SON, DR. SAM C. ARNETT JR., AND HIS WIFE, OLGA, DONATED THE HOUSE TO LUBBOCK CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. THE HOUSE WAS MOVED TO THE CAMPUS TO SERVE AS ITS FIRST ADMINISTRATION BUILDING. THE HOUSE FULFILLED VARIOUS FUNCTIONS UNTIL 1975, WHEN IT WAS GIVEN TO THE LUBBOCK CHRISTIAN COLLEGE ASSOCIATES, A WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION DEDICATED TO SUPPORT AND FUNDRAISING FOR THE COLLEGE. IN 1978, THE HOUSE WAS RELOCATED AGAIN AND RENOVATED A SHORT DISTANCE FROM CAMPUS.

THE CRAFTSMAN STYLE BUNGALOW WAS DESIGNED BY FORT WORTH ARCHITECT M.L. WALLER, WHO DESIGNED OTHER BUILDINGS IN LUBBOCK AND ALSO THE CROSBY COUNTY COURTHOUSE. THE EIGHT ROOM, 1 1/2-STORY WOOD FRAME HOUSE FEATURES GABLED AND HIP ROOFED SECTIONS, WIDE PORCHES AND A LOW KNEE WALL. THE FRONT DOOR IS A REPLICATION OF THE ORIGINAL STYLE. THE ARNETT HOUSE, WHICH ORIGINALLY FACED AVENUE L JUST SOUTH OF THE LUBBOCK SANITARIUM, IS ONE OF A FEW EARLY 20TH CENTURY RESIDENCES OF LUBBOCK STILL STANDING TODAY. THE HOUSE WAS RENOVATED IN 1978 THROUGH THE EFFORTS OF THE LUBBOCK CHRISTIAN COLLEGE ASSOCIATES AND C.R. BILLINGSLEY OF BILLINGSLEY AND STRACENER. CLAUDE MARTIN AND SONS WERE THE CONTRACTORS. LUCILLE MELCHER OF CAGLE BROTHERS FURNITURE OVERSAW INTERIOR DESIGN. IN 1984, THE CITY COUNCIL DESIGNATED THE HOUSE AS A LUBBOCK HISTORIC LANDMARK.

RECORDED TEXAS HISTORIC LANDMARK 2015 MARKER IS PROPERTY OF THE STATE OF TEXAS

Landscaping for the event was provided and installed by Tom's Tree Place.
