R | from the president

It's been an eventful year at LCU! We have dedicated the Christa Dobbs Center for Business, the beautiful new home of the School of Business, celebrated with the Lady Chaps as they advanced once again deep in the basketball playoffs, and marked a significant transition in leadership on the Board of Trustees as Jerry Harris concluded his tenure as chair after twenty extraordinary years of servant leadership.

In December of 2018, we received official word from the university's regional accrediting agency, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS), that we had successfully completed our regular, ten-year accreditation review without any follow-up required on LCU's part. That is the best result possible, and it is a wonderful tribute to the dedicated men and women who serve and teach at LCU.

The great news of LCU's re-affirmation came less than two months after the unexpected passing in October of our colleague and friend, Randy Sellers. We continue to pray for Jean and the entire Sellers family as they mourn this loss.

Randy served as LCU's assistant vice president for institutional effectiveness and played the leading role in the university's preparation for the accreditation review. The excellent result we achieved would not have been possible without Randy's extraordinary efforts. He was known and appreciated for his unflagging commitment to excellence, his legendary attention to detail, and his practical wisdom. Randy is truly one of the university's unsung heroes and at Homecoming 2019 the university recognized him, posthumously, as the recipient of the FW Mattox Award for his outstanding service to LCU. We are all indebted to Randy Sellers and so many other unsung LCU heroes who quietly and capably invest their time and expertise to ensure the university's growth and success.

I hope that you find encouragement and inspiration in this issue of Reflections. We love getting to share these stories about LCU people and the difference they are making all around the world, including in East Africa. Thank you for all the ways you support LCU with your prayers, your time and energy, and your resources. May God bless you in the year ahead.

HONORED AT DEDICATION OF NEW CENTER FOR BUSINESS

host of alumni from the LCU School of Business, along with special guests and community business leaders, gathered for the Christa Dobbs Center for Business dedication on September 11, 2018. It was only one year earlier that everything but the outer walls of the Mabee Science Center was demolished, marking the first step in implementing the university's vision for the new home of the LCU School of Business. Classes began meeting in the new facility at the start of the semester in August, and the dedication day of September 11 was specifically chosen because it also happens to be the birthday of the building's namesake, Dr. Christa Dobbs.

Standing in this new, state-of-the-art facility, former students of Dr. Christa Dobbs must surely have experienced a flashback or two during the dedication ceremony. As Dr. Dobbs smartly walked to the podium for her remarks, the audience could see the familiar sparkle in her eyes, and they could hear once more the quick wit and keen sense of humor that were so often a part of her teaching, woven effortlessly throughout her comments.

Her statement was filled with humility and gratitude for the honor bestowed upon her. In true Christa Dobbs fashion, she acknowledged all of her former colleagues who worked together through the years to build a successful department over her twenty-nine year tenure as department chair. Her thoughtful reflections were punctuated with gracious humor and poignant notes of wisdom. Those crowded into the City Bank Commons and Conference Center right in the heart of the new facility could certainly understand why the anonymous alumni donor who gave the lead gift for the project insisted that the new home for LCU's School for Business be named for this very special lady.

LCU School of Business Dean Tracy Mack and President Tim Perrin welcomed an overflow crowd to the dedication, while LCU Trustee Melisa Roberts ('84) shared memories of her time as a student of Dr. Dobbs and LCU Board of Trustee Chair Terry Creech ('81) prayed blessings on the facility and all present and future School of Business students and faculty.

Dean Mack and Dr. Caren Fullerton, Associate Professor of Business Administration and Management, oversaw the project for the university. However, the entire business faculty collaborated on the vision for the building, which included several components that make the space exceptionally functional and distinctive.

The dedicated School of Business faculty has been positively influencing students for many years... the LCU School of Business is the largest undergraduate program of the University.

The striking front entrance sets the tone for the whole building. “We really wanted an impressive atrium, with a lot of glass and natural light. We were also determined to include a stock ticker, a large commons area, and a large lecture hall. Ultimately, [generous donors helped to make] these ideas become a reality and are now known as the United Family Atrium, The City Bank Commons and Conference Center, and the Thomas and Virginia Rhodes Lecture Hall.”

The dedicated School of Business faculty has been positively influencing students for many years. Even with limited physical resources and facilities, the LCU School of Business is the largest undergraduate program of the University, offering academic programs in Accounting, Finance, Economics, Business Administration, Information Systems, and Digital Media Arts.

The reputation of the LCU School of business is strong, but Dean Mack hopes that the building will continue to enhance recruiting. “There’s definitely that ‘wow’ factor when we give tours to prospective students,” he said of the new building. “The word I always get is that it’s impressive, and that, in my mind, is the biggest compliment.”

The Dobbs Center for Business is the latest signal that LCU is experiencing significant momentum. Mack continued, “From the beginning of the project we felt that this facility should build on the previous success of the Ling Science Center and the Talkington Center for Nursing Education and make one more impressive step in the improvement of campus facilities. Now, if you walk by the building, particularly at night, it’s an impressive visual—it’s a beautiful building, with beautiful lighting, right in the center of the campus.”

MORE THAN B

Bookstores have been a fixture on college campuses across the nation for over a century. LCU is no exception, having housed a bookstore on campus for nearly the entirety of its 62 years of existence.

From the beginning until 1981, the campus bookstore was blessed to have many different individuals step in to manage the operation, many of them often having other campus responsibilities as well. For the past 37 years, though, three individuals have managed the bookstore, each helping shape the on-campus experience for our students and impacting their lives in unique and powerful ways: Forrest Whitlow, LaLani Carter, and Denise McNeill.

Forrest Whitlow ('88) came to campus as a student in 1977, after retiring as a Colonel from the United States Air Force. He was on the GI bill and enrolled in various classes that were of interest to him. The opportunity to serve as the bookstore manager was presented to him several times, but he was really enjoying being a student. After three repeated requests from LCU's business manager, he finally agreed to be the bookstore manager in early 1981. Whitlow assumed the responsibility with very little knowledge of the bookstore. His only previous business experience was during his youth and high school years, as he helped his father run the family's small grocery store in Kress, TX.

Through enterprising dedication, tenacity, and an innate desire to learn new things, Whitlow quickly acclimated to managing the bookstore. He purchased an IBM 500 computer and spent many Saturdays learning the computer and developing an electronic inventory for the bookstore. He also converted the university's post office operation to a computerized system after he was given responsibility for the entire SUB, which included the post office, the game room, and the bowling alley. Each of these areas required supervising and mentoring numerous student workers.

Whitlow reflected, "It's been a while back, so it's hard for me to remember every single name, but I fondly remember that lots of students from all walks of life would somehow make their way into my office and we'd begin to talk about their life – their struggles and their dreams. One of my walls was full of air craft and Air Force photos, and I think they served as conversation starters. Those were very special times for me."

Store Story:

BOOKS AND T-SHIRTS

Lalani Carter, Forrest Whitlow, and Denise McNeill gather in the Chap Store.

Denise McNeill

LaLani Carter ('88) began working with Whitlow in June of 1988, becoming the manager in 1995 and serving in that role for 13 years. "Forrest quickly became much more than my "boss." Over the years, he was a wonderful mentor and is now a great friend. I was blessed to work with many wonderful people, staff and students alike, many of whom I am still in contact with."

Carter's career with the bookstore saw many changes. "We actually moved the Bookstore during my time as manager [into what was the former bowling alley]. Also, during my time in the Bookstore, we became "automated" and went from individually pricing textbooks to using barcodes, which was a huge time-saving factor. I loved my time in the Bookstore and cherish the many memories made in those 20 years," she shared.

The current manager of the newly rebranded ChapStore, Denise (Whitlow) McNeill ('82), is actually Forrest Whitlow's daughter. Following in her father's footsteps, she was hired to run the enterprise in 2008 when LaLani Carter, who had just earned her M.S. in Counseling, began teaching in the Psychology and Counseling Department.

When asked about her role as manager, McNeill said, "It doesn't seem possible that I have been doing this for ten years now, because I have been having so much fun interacting with students. I remember my dad [Forrest Whitlow] would always have students in the office who would have just stopped in to see him. He is easy to talk to and students seemed to always seek his advice about life. And, I've been able to experience some of the same. I really see this as a ministry opportunity, to be able to sit and visit with our students as they live life on our campus. Sometimes, they ask my advice, and I sort of feel like this "bookstore thing" has come full circle – just like when my dad used to be the manager."

Prompted by changes in the textbook industry that made online purchasing simpler and more affordable, the store discontinued carrying a physical inventory of textbooks just after McNeill started in the role. While the ChapStore staff does continue to facilitate and assist with the on-line purchase of textbooks for students, the retail store is predominantly selling LCU-branded items, thus the name change. Through a generous donation from an alumnus, the store front was moved back to its original location in the SUB, with a complete remodel. The ChapStore also has an on-line presence for those who do not live in the area: <https://shop.lcuchapstore.com>.

The next time you are on campus, stop by the ChapStore to see some fashionable and exciting LCU-branded merchandise, and step into the manager's office for a friendly smile and conversation.

STEP RIGHT UP FOR LCU THEATRE'S LATEST AND GREATEST SHOW!

LCU's fall musical, Barnum, ran to great reception over the weekend of Oct. 5-6, featuring bumbling clowns, stunning musical numbers, and show-stopping staging. Directed by Dr. Don "Doc" Williams, with musical direction by Dr. Laurie Doyle, the musical depicted a creative non-fiction rendition of the life of P.T. Barnum, famed showman.

"Barnum gave the students an opportunity to showcase the special skills required to create the circus atmosphere and at the same time create thoughtful moments of emotion for their character," said Williams.

LCU theater performed a production of Barnum in the early 90s, so Williams and Doyle invited alumni who were part of the show then to attend the 2018 production. Several alumni from the 90s production attended, including Ken Garner ('91), who played P.T. Barnum.

"Six or seven of us from the original production all went together," Garner said. "We'd quietly hum along as we remembered the songs. It was quite enjoyable, and it was very different – it was in the big auditorium!"

Attending the production was Garner's first time back to LCU campus since his brother graduated in '94. Garner was a business major, but he had the opportunity to perform in theater because of many opportunities provided to all LCU students – and it seemed fitting that twenty-plus years ago he played the character of an imaginative business entrepreneur.

"To have these alumni come and meet the current cast and visit with us was a real serendipity," Williams said.

Barnum starred students Clayton Hendrikson (P.T. Barnum), Abby Langford (Charity Barnum), Jay Lokey (Ringmaster), and Hannah Flournoy (Jenny Lind), along with a chorus of entertaining clowns.

Hendrikson and Langford performed powerfully musically, but they also portrayed facets of complicated characters throughout decades in history – 1835 to 1880. Flournoy's soprano immediately endeared the audience to her character. Lokey led the parade, the circus, and the show with pomp every step of the way.

The clown chorus bumbled around, bringing props and set pieces on stage. They fulfilled roles for comic relief and chorus vocals, as well as being the primary technical crew for the stage.

Each character acted as a puzzle piece of the show, adding depth and dimension to each of them. This great show of characters, vocals, staging, and a touch of Barnum's famed "humbug," created a masterful performance.

Moser Ministry Conference

Over the past eleven years, LCU has hosted the Moser Ministry Conference, an event devoted to different aspects of ministry and featuring many distinguished speakers and leaders in the Christian community. The 2018 Moser Ministry Conference featured Randy Harris, Dr. David Frazee, Jeremy Smith, and Dr. Barry Stephens with the theme, “Young Adult Faith and a Secular Age.” Ministers from across the region, as well as LCU undergraduate and graduate students, shared insightful presentations and in-depth dialogue about ministry in an evolving culture.

Zach Badon, senior Youth and Family Ministry major, was presented with the K.C. Moser Student Ministry Award for exhibiting ministry beyond the LCU classroom. Presenting the award in the photo to the right, is Dr. Brandon Fredenburg, Assistant Dean, Alfred and Patricia Smith College of Biblical Studies, Associate Professor Biblical Studies. The Charles Siburt Christian Character Award was also presented at the conference and awarded to Josiah Knowles, a junior, missions major.

The sessions from the 2018 Moser Ministry Conference can be seen and heard on LCU.edu/Moser.

BETENBOUGH LECTURES

ON YOUTH & CHILDREN'S MINISTRY AND INTERN JOB FAIR

Dozens of youth and children ministries, para-church ministries, and mental health organizations recently gathered in the Baker Conference Center to interview LCU Bible and Ministry majors for summer and semester-long internship opportunities. This annual fall event is significant in that it offers students an opportunity to complete field education requirements and add to their ministry experience portfolio. Students are expected to dress professionally and come prepared with a resume in hand and a willingness to engage with participating interviewers. The feedback from this year's Intern Job Fair was very positive.

"I was waiting for a 'dud' to come through, but none were found. LCU has some wonderful, aspiring ministers."

"The process of registering for the event, the organization on the day of the event, and the hospitality of LCU were incredible!"

"We will definitely be coming back to interview your students in the future. Job well done."

These were a few of the statements heard from participating ministries and organizations. We are always looking for ways to improve this experience for both student and interviewing organizations. Next year's Intern Job Fair will be even better, as we look for ways to expand and enhance opportunities.

The capstone of the day was the first sessions of the Betenbough Lectures on Youth Ministry, an event that is intentionally paired with the Intern Job Fair so that youth and children ministers do not have to make two trips to campus. Made possible by a generous donation from the Betenbough Foundation, the Youth Ministry Program features leading, world-renowned voices in Youth and Children's Ministry for ministry professionals and LCU students. This year was no exception to our tradition of excellent keynote speakers, as we were joined by Dr. Duffy Robbins, whose work has influenced the world of youth ministry for decades. Dr. Robbins has the ability to take deep theological and psychosocial truths, make practical application, and wrap it all up in wonderful humor. All those who attended received great insight from his teaching and practical steps for immediate implementation in their home ministry context.

The LCU Youth Ministry Program enjoys some wonderful ministry partnerships with the Fuller Youth Institute, Youth Specialties, and Download Youth Ministry (DYM). This year, all registered participants received a special gift from DYM, a FREE six-month Gold Membership to all of the exceptional and practical, on-line resources of DYM.

The Intern Job Fair and Betenbough Lectures on Youth Ministry was a great success. Look for next year's event to feature an expanded job fair and other fun and exciting opportunities.

THINKING CRITICALLY ABOUT

CIVIL DISCOURSE

LCU began an initiative tied to its Quality Enhancement Program called the Thinking Critically Initiative, in fall 2011. The program was designed to focus the attention of the entire student body each year on developing critical thinking skills and focusing those thoughts on a particularly impactful subject.

The inaugural topic was “Thinking Critically about Poverty.” Continued annually since that year, other topics have included “Thinking Critically about Success,” “Thinking Critically about Justice,” and “Thinking Critically about Popular Culture.” Each of the initiatives was intended to challenge our students to evaluate critically their personal biases, thought processes, and unexamined beliefs.

This year’s theme is Thinking Critically about Civil Discourse. In an age of political and social divisiveness and a prevailing attitude of “us vs. them,” this theme seeks to enable students to find ways to have deep discussions on important issues of the day in a respectful, productive way. This discussion is important not only in political and philosophical contexts, but also in day-to-day life. The ability to recognize that others’ views can be equally valid and the capacity to agree to disagree are quickly becoming lost in our modern cultural climate.

The inaugural event for this year was a chapel program in which Dr. Susan Blassingame, Dean of the Hancock College of Liberal Arts and Education, introduced the topic and outlined some of the events planned for the rest of the semester. The plenary speaker for Thinking Critically about Civil Discourse was Dr. David Roach, Associate Dean of Academic Affairs and Professor of Communication at Texas Tech University. Dr. Roach discussed the different kinds of “uncivil discourse” that permeate our political and cultural climate, and then discussed the ways in which critical thinkers can work to move towards more civil discourse in our arguments and conversations using what he termed the “Jesus Frame.”

Other events included split chapel sessions featuring two tag-team discussions. The first featured Dr. Amanda (Ellis) Boston ('06) and Dr. Kirt Martin ('75), whose talk was titled “Faith and Science,” while the second presentation was made by Dr. Ronna (Coffey) Privett ('83) and Dr. Shawn Hughes ('90), titled “Fake News and Cognitive Dissonance.” Each discussion highlighted somewhat controversial and relevant topics, examining the issues critically and working towards a better understanding of civil discourse within those contexts. Another chapel program featured a presentation by Dr. Carlos Perez ('05), titled, “We’re just talking...”

Amid the often-uncivil political environment in which Americans find themselves, it is increasingly important that LCU students learn how to engage with their peers, colleagues, and even strangers in ways that promote productive discussions and healthy relationships.

Other events this fall included a panel discussion entitled, “Raise Your Argument, Not Your Voice,” featuring Dr. Matt Byars ('00) and Dr. Carol Carroll, two colleagues in the English Department. The two used their close relationship to discuss how, despite their often-differing political beliefs, civil discourse has enabled them to remain fast friends, even if the best option has been to agree to disagree on certain subjects. They shared tips for maintaining civil discussions, and fielded questions from the audience.

The initiative has also featured two screenings of pertinent films—Mr. Smith Goes to Washington and Won't You Be My Neighbor. Each film screening concluded with a panel discussion, examining the themes shown within the films and exploring lessons learned about civil discourse gleaned from each.

Amid the often-uncivil political environment in which Americans find themselves, it is increasingly important that LCU students learn how to engage with their peers, colleagues, and even strangers in ways that promote productive discussions and healthy relationships. This initiative will be considered successful if students gain an understanding of the importance of civil discourse and if they have been equipped to engage others in positive and constructive conversation.

FACULTY SCHOLARSHIP

The work that faculty members do outside of the lecture halls, seminar rooms, and laboratories on campus is fundamental to the mission of Lubbock Christian University: “to transform the hearts, minds, and hands of students for lives of purpose and service.”

LCU Faculty have a well-deserved reputation for how they mentor students in and out of the classroom. By remaining active in academic life at the local, national, and international levels, our faculty are better equipped for their lives of service here on campus. Their dedication to scholarly projects enhances the student experience at LCU, advancing greater knowledge and inspiring further research.

Dr. Mark Sneed

Professor of Bible

“Methods, Muddles, and Modes of Literature: The Question of Influence Between Wisdom and Prophecy.” Pages 30-44 in Riddles and Revelations: Explorations into the Relationship between Wisdom and Prophecy in the Hebrew Bible. Library of Hebrew Bible/Old Testament Studies 634. Edited by Mark J. Boda, Russell L. Meek, and Rusty Osborne. London: T&T Clark, 2018.

This article attempts to demonstrate that the notion of two different streams of tradition, one prophetic, the other sapiential, is inaccurate. Most biblical scholars maintain that the Prophetic Literature in the Old Testament was authored by prophets who had their own particular view of the world distinct from the sages who composed the Wisdom Literature. They assume that these two modes of literature reflect this professional distinction. I argue that there is only one professional group responsible for the composition of both the Prophetic and Wisdom Literature. These were Israelite scribes who were trained to compose in various modes of literature: legal, historical, prophetic, hymnic, erotic, and sapiential, etc. So the question of an influence between the two groups becomes moot.

Dr. JoAnn Long

Professor of Nursing and Director of Research Development

Long, J. D., Silva, S. and Boswell, C. (2020). Qualitative and Mixed Methods in Introduction to Nursing Research: Incorporating Evidence-Based Practice (5th Ed.) (Boswell & Cannon, Ed.). Jones & Bartlett Learning : Burlington: MA. ISBN-13: 9781284149791.

The expansion of nursing knowledge based on scientific findings is vital to advance and promote health, prevent disease, and enhance the quality of life as lifespans expand. Nursing knowledge is generated from research and serves as the foundation for evidence-based practice. An integrated understanding of quantitative, qualitative, and mixed-methods research is essential for nurses charged with implementing clinical decisions based on the best evidence available. This chapter presents a brief history of qualitative research in nursing comparison of quantitative and qualitative research paradigms, followed by an overview of the most commonly used qualitative designs in nursing research, sampling, data collection, data analysis, and quality measures for both qualitative and mixed methods research—guiding the reader in the application of these concepts to nursing practice.

Dr. Michael Martin

Associate Professor of the New Testament

Michael Wade Martin and Jason A. Whitlark, Inventing Hebrews: Design and Purpose in Ancient Rhetoric, Cambridge U P, 2018.

Inventing Hebrews examines a perennial topic in the study of the Letter to the Hebrews, its structure and purpose.

Michael Wade Martin and Jason A. Whitlark undertake a thorough synthesis of the ancient theory of invention and arrangement, providing a new account of Hebrews' design. The key to the speech's outline, the authors argue, is in its use of 'disjointed' arrangement, a template ubiquitous in antiquity but little discussed in modern biblical studies. The 'letter' may be seen as a conventional speech arranged according to the expectations of ancient rhetoric. Resolving a long-standing conundrum, this volume offers a hermeneutical tool necessary for interpreting Hebrews, as well as countless other speeches from Greco-Roman antiquity.

Dr. Doug Swartz

Assistant Professor, Natural Sciences

Zoghbi, M. E., Mok, L., Swartz, D.J., Singh, A., Fendley, G.A., Urbatsch, I.L., Altenberg, G.A. (2017) Substrate-induced conformational changes in the nucleotide-binding domains of lipid bilayer-associated P-glycoprotein during ATP hydrolysis, Journal of Biological Chemistry 292:50 20412-20424.

P-glycoprotein is a membrane protein that functions as a multidrug pump in humans and many other organisms. It uses the energy from ATP to pump pharmaceuticals out of cells, which can influence disease treatments and contribute to multidrug resistant cancers. This article is a step in our long-term goal of using biochemical and biophysical techniques to understand how changes in the protein's shape allows it to transport drugs. In this work, molecular probes were attached to specific sites in the protein. Then, the distances between these probes tracked how the protein changed when various drug and ATP combinations were added. These results contribute to the overall understanding of P-glycoprotein, which will aid in designing more effective disease treatments in the future.

LANIER LECTURE SEEKS THE HISTORICAL

King David

For the past seven years, LCU and the Lanier Theological Library have jointly hosted the Lanier Theological Library Lectures, a series of high-profile discussions featuring scholars and a wide range of topics in the fields of history, theology, and archaeology. Recent guest presenters include Dr. Peter J. Williams of Cambridge University, Dr. Tremper Longman III, a key translator on several editions of the Bible and renowned scholar, and Mr. Melvin Tinker, internationally renowned Christian author and speaker. In 2012, LCU curated an exhibit of the Dead Sea Scrolls and featured Dr. Westin Fields, who is renowned for his studies of the texts.

This year's lecture featured Dr. Yosef Garfinkel, noted archaeologist and professor at the Institute of Archaeology at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Dr. Garfinkel's discussion on "Searching for the Historical King David" focused on recent discoveries in archaeology that have finally shed some light historically on King David from the biblical text.

Until recent years, the only source of information on King David was the biblical account—and the significant absence of external evidence was concerning for biblical scholars, not only for modern knowledge of the account, but also for any evaluation of the historical accuracy of the biblical text. Then, in 1993, a royal Aramaic inscription mentioned the "house" or "dynasty" of David, which was the first historical, extra-textual evidence that David actually existed. Then, in 2007, Dr. Garfinkel began excavating a site that had been known in Israel for over one hundred years at Khirbet Qeiyafa, which had remained undisturbed because it had been assumed to be from a much later period.

The find was significant because it helped bolster the biblical account's historical accuracy by affirming the dates when urbanization had begun in ancient Judah. Many scholars who doubted the biblical accuracy suggested that the process of that society turning from an agrarianbased culture to a city-centered culture occurred much later than is suggested by the biblical account. Carbon-dated artifacts from the archaeological site confirmed, though, that the process began much earlier than those scholars had posited, affirming the accuracy of the biblical narrative—Dr. Garfinkel described the find as “revolutionary.” This evidence was reported in publications such as the New York Times, National Geographic, the BBC, among others.

The legitimacy of the implications came under fire by skeptics, who argued that the city was not actually Judean, and therefore its excavation did not support the biblical timeline, as Dr. Garfinkel has posited. The archaeologist then examined six different aspects of the city to determine the nationality of the inhabitants: urban planning, cooking habits, administration, writing, geopolitical location, and the cult. Each of these pointed towards Khirbet Qeiyafa being a Judean establishment.

Additionally, the archaeological team found several items that explicitly reinforced this finding.

The same archaeological team in a different region found similar findings later, in the form of an ancient village called Khirbet al-Ra'i. While the site reflected a richer history as far as different cultures and occupants over a period, the artifacts and remnants that Dr. Garfinkel's team found there helped support the findings at the first site, showing consistencies in dating, cultural findings, and implications.

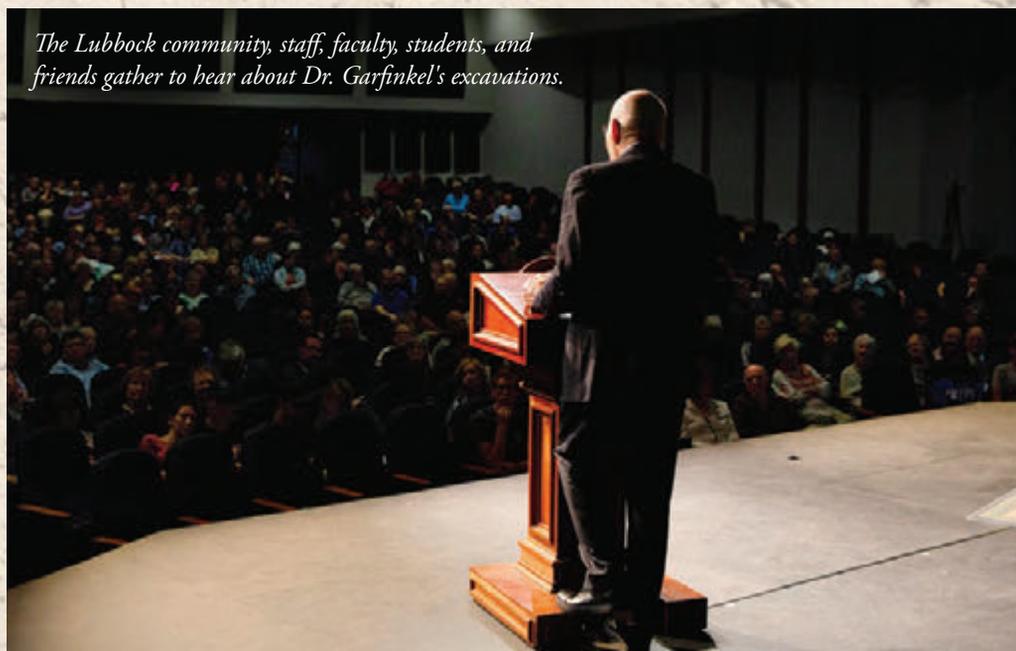

The findings of Dr. Garfinkel's teams in both Khirbet Qeiyafa and Khirbet al-Ra'i helped show the advanced urbanization of the pre-planned cities, especially in the materials related to administration and writing. This data helped solidify the legitimacy of the biblical accounts and the accuracy of those texts.

PROGRAM OPENS NEW POSSIBILITIES FOR FUTURE LCU STUDENTS

The quality of LCU's academic programs and the depth of instruction provided across many disciplines are evident in the success of students who graduate each year. Alumni are making a significant difference around the globe through a variety of industries and fields, and those successes speak to the effectiveness of the university's programs, faculty, and staff. In an effort to transform even more hearts, minds, and hands for lives of purpose and service, the university is seeking ways to make it easier for potential students to invest in themselves with a college degree. It is from that commitment that the university is offering LCU Advantage to incoming freshmen beginning in the fall of 2019.

One of the biggest concerns with higher education across the nation is affordability and the accumulation of student debt—and this concern is often exaggerated when considering a private university. "In my conversations with students and parents, I've found that many—if not all—are concerned about the costs associated with higher education," shared Chris Hayes, LCU's Director of Recruiting. The total cost of attending LCU is actually often comparable with many public universities as far as total cost after scholarships and grants are applied. LCU is constantly looking for ways to enhance access to an LCU education, and that is why the new LCU Advantage is being introduced for all incoming freshman students.

"In my 19 years in Higher Education, I have never seen the fear of debt increasing so rapidly," explained Dr. Mondy Brewer,

Vice President of Enrollment Management at LCU. "The opportunity to take that fear away made our decision to offer LCU Advantage an easy one. Students can now choose Lubbock Christian University and relax, knowing that student loans will not be a concern when they graduate."

While LCU Advantage is not insurance, it functions much as an insurance policy would for student loans. Essentially, LCU pays into the program each year for participants who elect to participate—eliminating any additional cost for the student—and when these students graduate from LCU, if they are working more than 30 hours per week and making less than $43,000 annually, the program will help cover a portion of their monthly student loan payments. The exact percentage depends on the graduate's salary, but the program can potentially cover up to the entirety of the payment depending on the student's annual income. The best part? LCU is the only university in Texas to offer this program to all incoming freshmen students, beginning in the fall of 2019—no matter what, if a student is accepted to LCU, he or she is eligible for this program at no additional cost.

LCU Advantage is already creating a buzz among prospective students. One future Chap explained how much relief the program has given to his college decision: "It helps take the pressure off of me, knowing that this program will help until I can get established at my dream job. It's encouraging to know LCU will continue to help me beyond my actual schooling."

Another explained that without the program, she may not have been able to consider LCU as her college at all. "This has opened up a new opportunity that may not have been possible without the LCU Advantage!" When considering the benefits of this program, along with the fact that the average student debt for LCU graduates is actually below the national average—thanks to the extensive financial assistance packages that are available to students—the LCU experience is an option that prospective students cannot afford to pass up.

Aside from the obvious benefits for incoming students, the program also demonstrates the confidence LCU has in its programs and its graduates. "We believe that this program makes a strong statement about how much we believe in the product that we're offering, in the quality of the education," said LCU President Tim Perrin. "It also makes a strong statement about our graduates. We want them to be able to follow their calling, follow their passions, and not be led by concerns about student debt."

The program works in concert with student loans, so it kicks in at whatever point the graduate is required to begin making payments. This means that it is hassle-free when dealing with graduate schools, because it still allows eligible students to defer payment while pursuing further degrees. The program lasts for the life of the loan, or until the graduate's income exceeds the target threshold.

LCU Advantage seeks to make a tangible difference in the financial dimension of the LCU student experience. It affirms the university's confidence in the education being provided, and it invests in the future that our students will shape for themselves and for our world beyond their time at LCU.

Since our founding, sharing the good news of Jesus far and wide and understanding the blessings that come through faith in him have been integral to an LCU education.

At the very core of Lubbock Christian University's purpose is the goal of broadening our students' awareness of a world beyond the South Plains of Texas—a world in need of Jesus.

While there were certainly a large number of students who were from the South Plains region in those early years, founding president Dr. F.W. Mattox also recruited Toyoko Suzuki ('59) from Otaku, Toyoko, Japan. Suzuki was the first foreign student and a member of the first graduating class of LCU, bringing a global perspective on culture and mission to the school.

According to the 1959 yearbook, the Missions Studies student organization was established “to learn more about all phases of mission work. At the meetings, the progress of missionaries in foreign countries is traced, possibilities for service are discussed, and reports are given by visiting missionaries.”

Additionally, the Acappella and Meistersinger choruses began traveling by bus sharing the good news through song to churches and schools, at first in the region and then in bordering states, and later internationally. Our students soon took the initiative to form The Montana Mission Group, spending the summer of 1962 in Montana, while another group of students organized a trip to Bayshore, New York, in the summer of 1963.

Since those early years, many other spots on the globe received the good news either directly or indirectly because of LCU students and others associated with the university. Many of the articles in this issue help reveal how God's hand has providentially drawn people from across the world into His ongoing story of the Kingdom of God in Africa. What follows are very brief stories introducing some of these people who have a connection to LCU and how God has woven their lives together into a beautiful tapestry.

LCU PRESIDENT INTRODUCES TARBETS INTO MISSION WORK

Gaston Tarbet ('59), co-class president of LCU's first graduating class, finished his bachelor's degree and became a campus minister in Albuquerque. While doing this ministry, he and his wife, Janet, were making plans to serve in Singapore for ten years as missionaries to train national church leaders there. The Singapore opportunity closed up, and soon after, Dr. F.W. Mattox was a guest speaker in spring of 1966 at their Albuquerque church. Dr. Mattox told Gaston about how his daughter and son-in-law, Patti and Rees Bryant, had just lost a team member in Nigeria, and "you are just the right man to take his place."

The Tarbets, who had never considered a life in Nigeria, Africa, felt called and began preparing themselves. Their initial mentor for the work was Jim Massey, a former teammate of the Bryants who had recently come back to Lubbock and was teaching at LCU.

The Tarbets arrived in Nigeria in September 1966, and in 1967 civil war broke out in the country. Rees and Patti Bryant came back to LCU and taught in the Bible department for the next ten years. The Tarbets relocated to Cameroon, Africa, for a period and then later served in western Kenya, and eventually Uganda.

In 1977, Larry ('72) and Diane (Clutter, '72) Stephens began their work in Kisumu, Kenya, taking over the work begun by the Tarbets. Larry and Diane Stephens labored in Kenya for over a decade, and were rejoined by the Tarbets on two occasions, first in '79-'80 and again in '88-'89.

KENYAN STUDENT INFLUENCES LCU CROSS COUNTRY

Willie Sang left Kenya to attend LCU in 1975 to run cross-country for Hugh Rhodes, and was named an All American in 1977. While a student at LCU, James Johnson befriended him in the residence hall, and Sang became close to the Quaker Avenue congregation, where the Johnson family attended. Sang eventually went back to Kenya. He never ran track for Darrell Price, but he did assist Coach Price in coordinating mission trips to Kenya over the years. Sang later received his PhD and currently serves as Director of the Kenya Medical Research Institute (KEMRI).

TYLER AND HAYS FAMILIES FORM A TEAM IN KITALE

Jim Gasb, current chancellor at Livingston International University (LIU), presents Shawn Tyler an award for his service as Chancellor from 2008-2017. Looking on is Dr. Richard Trull current Vice Chancellor of LIU.

In the summer of 1980, Shawn Tyler was attending a retreat for church ministers. Tom Langford, a long-time elder of the Quaker Avenue Church of Christ, was announcing an opportunity for mission work in Kenya: "We've had a couple drop out, and we are now looking for someone else; someone young, someone married, and preferably someone presently without children." Tyler looked around the room and noticed he was the only person in that room that fit all of these criteria. He felt the hair raise up on his neck and felt led to consider the opportunity. After reviewing a number of candidates, the Quaker Avenue church ultimately chose Shawn and Linda for this work.

As he looks back, Tyler credits Gaston Tarbet as a significant mentor during his preparation. After arriving in Kitale, Kenya, Shawn was introduced to Larry Stephens ('72), a mentor who was also in the field, serving about 100 miles away from Kitale. Stephens made himself available to missionaries new to the field, teaching them how to organize themselves, how to mature churches, and how to help organize local elderships for life after their field missionary leaves.

In the summer of 1984, Kirk ('83) and Susan Hayes joined Shawn and Linda Tyler in Kitale, Kenya, which happened to be near the hometown of former LCU student, Willie Sang. Hayes discovered his calling to serve as a missionary in Africa in 1979 when he was a 19-year-old senior in Welch High School. That year, he made a trip to Malawi to visit his aunts and uncles, Roland and Wanda Hayes and B. and Ruth Shelburne, who had started a missionary work there in 1962. Kirk graduated from LCU in 1983, married his wife Susan, and they went to Fuller Seminary for more missionary training, before joining the Tylers in 1984.

A NEW CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY IN KENYA

After so many years of mission efforts in southeast Africa, there were approximately 500 churches in mostly rural settings. It seemed obvious to some that there needed to be a way to educate these new Christians in their own country in order to help provide church leadership.

Shawn Tyler and others began the dream of starting a Christian university in southeast Africa, and a grass roots effort began. Using the influence of many individuals and groups in both Kenya and the U.S., Livingstone International University first began having classes in 2012. Former LCU President Ken Jones and former LCU Provost, Dr. Rod Blackwood were heavily involved in providing expertise and in making it possible for Kenyans to attend LCU to obtain their credentials for becoming faculty at the new university, and Shawn Tyler served as the Livingstone International University's first chancellor from 2008 until 2017.

One of Tyler's duties at LCU also includes being the faculty coordinator for MissionLink. This organization offers resources to LCU students and to off-campus entities and organizations who are interested or are already involved in missions.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY FOUNDED IN UGANDA

"LivingStone International University (LIU) is a capstone for decades of mission work," said Shawn Tyler, director of LCU's MissionLink professor at LCU and former chancellor and chair of the board of directors for LIU. He currently serves as a member of the Livingstone board of directors.

In the mid-2000s, Tyler and a group of other organizers recognized a need in Africa for Christ-centered higher education. The concept began in discussions at a summit in 2006; a full proposal was approved for a provisional accreditation license in 2008; construction began in 2011; and LIU officially opened in 2012. The process of beginning the university was a journey spanning years, but it has grown now into a 45-acre campus with 300 students in Mbale, Uganda.

In Uganda, approximately 100,000 students who graduate each year from secondary school are qualified to attend a university. However, the country's university system can only accommodate 67,000 – leaving one third of those students who are qualified for higher education without an option for pursuing such a goal.

"There's a tremendous need and a tremendous desire, and we have the potential to grow and fulfill that need," said Tyler.

Both former LCU President Ken Jones and former provost Rod Blackwood were strategic in supporting the planting of a Christian university in Uganda. LCU has collaborated with LIU by providing student development opportunities and scholarships for LIU students to further their educations at LCU. Diana Eid ('12) earned her bachelor's degree in mathematics and then earned a master's, while Patrick Chebet ('12) finished one master's degree in education and another in educational leadership. Both have returned to teach at LivingStone. Manna Eid is currently working on a Master of Science in Clinical Mental Health Counseling and is planning to return to LivingStone to serve as a university fundraiser. Each of these native Africans has been working toward contributing to the sustainability of LivingStone. Ty Hayes ('09) was born in Kenya while his parents served as missionaries in Kitale, and he recently returned to teach English and Literature at LivingStone.

LIU currently offers degrees in business administration, Christian ministry, media technology, internet communications, and education.

The young university is growing and is already making a difference in Uganda and southeast Africa with its 300-strong student body. The third prominent building is under construction, and the addition of future-planned facilities will allow the university to continue growing. LIU hopes to offer more degrees in the near future and eventually sustain a student body of 4,000 from various countries in Africa.

“ For students who have a real calling for vocational mission work, our Mission Link: Center for Global Engagement promotes and facilitates mission studies and training. ”

MISSION LINK TO HOST CONFERENCE APRIL 2019

LCU strives to cultivate a campus culture of living and sharing our faith in Christ—a high calling for every discipline and for every endeavor of the university. Students are encouraged to be missional in their daily lives and routines, but they also have the opportunity to engage in specific mission efforts and service projects around the world.

For students who have a real calling for vocational mission work, our Mission Link: Center for Global Engagement promotes and facilitates mission studies and training that greatly increases opportunities for students to share the Word of Christ, both locally and abroad. This institute focuses on preparing students for missions through research, training, and discipleship.

Mission Link became a campus organization in 2013, offering resources to LCU students and to off-campus entities and organizations who are interested in or already involved in missions.

Mission Link is a resource for all LCU students, no matter their chosen academic discipline. One of the opportunities available through the organization is the placement in internships at non-profits or non-government organizations for students in locations like Kenya, Nicaragua, Uganda, or even here in the United States.

Another dimension of Mission Link's work is offering a variety of resources for churches who are already involved in missions or who are looking to expand their opportunities for global service.

Mission Link will be hosting its missions conference on the LCU campus, April 5-6, 2019, making such resources more widely available. Plans for a full schedule of events are underway, and registration will open early in 2019. Check the LCU website for more details and for registration information.

KENYAN RUNNERS' POSITIVE IMPACT

Darrell Price began coaching cross-country track in 1990, inheriting from Coach Hugh Rhodes a team on which there were a few Kenyan runners. In subsequent years, Price would take mission trips to the African hometowns of some of his team members in order to meet their families and to introduce them to Jesus. Willie Sang proved instrumental to Price, as he helped arrange several trips to the area. These athletes were certainly influenced by Price, many of them becoming Christians who went back to their native countries after graduating. The LCU community was also influenced in a positive way as these foreign athletes took their rightful place among a diverse student body. Price was careful to recruit young people who could contribute to campus life as well as on the track. LCU won eleven NAIA National Championships in cross-country or track in the 1990's.

MISSION CHANGES COURSE

Tim ('79) and Rebecca (Henderson, '79) Tally each had their own individual journeys and exposure to mission work before LCU. Rebecca grew up in Thailand, as her parents, Parker and Donna Henderson, served as missionaries there from 1958 -1978. As the youngest in his family, Tim had experienced his older siblings leaving for short-term mission work throughout his childhood.

When they arrived at LCU, Tim and Rebecca became acquainted with each other and with Drs. Dan and Joyce Hardin, who had spent years in Korea as missionaries before becoming LCU faculty members. The Hardins served as mentors to Tim and Rebecca, and they each took missions classes from Dan Hardin.

Tim and Rebecca married in 1979 and immediately began working with the Broadway Church of Christ as they prepared for a mission effort in Thailand. Having learned from their time at LCU to be as fully prepared as possible before beginning any mission work, they attended a workshop on missions, where they happened to run into a large group of missionaries home on furlough from their work in Africa. That interaction changed the course of their lives as they began considering the work in Africa. Jim and Phyllis Beck were paired with the Tallys, and Dan and Joyce Hardin mentored all of them as a team for a two-year period of extensive preparation, which included team dynamics and linguistics training. Dan Hardin accompanied Tim on a discovery trip to Uganda, making plans for their team to move there.

Ten days before they were to leave, civil war broke out in Uganda, and they went to plan B, an alternate work on the coast of Kenya. The events surrounding their departure made it even more "faith-filled" because they left without a concrete plan in place, as far as location. They joined Jim and Phyllis Beck in Malindi, Kenya in July 1985, serving there for 12 years, and then in Mbasa for seven years.

DAN AND JOYCE HARDIN INFLUENCE MISSIONS AT LCU

The Tallys introduced Jim and Phyllis Beck to Dan and Joyce Hardin, as the Broadway Church of Christ began to consider a work in east Africa. Because civil war broke out in Uganda ten days before they left on their mission, they arrived in Malindi, Kenya without a clear direction for their work. They eventually chose to serve the remotely located Gariama tribe because they were so isolated from others and no one had really reached out to them.

The Becks and the Tallys worked together until 1996, when the Becks returned to the states, and the Tallys continued their work in Mbasa. Just after the Becks return, Dan Hardin was appointed LCU's provost, which left open his position of teaching missions in the Bible department. While it took some convincing, Beck became the full-time missionary in residence teaching missions classes at LCU. At the same time, he felt a calling to start Carpenters Church as a domestic missions effort. His experience in international missions and his domestic missions work at Carpenters Church overlapped to create a very rich missions program for LCU students.

BECK AND TYLER LEAD MISSION EFFORTS AT LCU

In 2011, Beck approached the LCU administration about having Shawn Tyler join the faculty as an additional missionary-in-residence, essentially creating two part-time positions. In doing so, Beck is able to serve on the faculty at LCU as a Missionary in Residence teaching a variety of missions classes for five months of the year, and he has stepped back into east African missions for the other seven months of the year. This arrangement provides significant opportunity to take students (both missions majors and non-majors) into the field as interns on a regular basis. Beck's and Tyler's continuing work in the field provides current students the opportunity engage in formative experiences and in energetic dialogue, all within the context of current, real-world missions.

Since 2011, approximately 50 LCU students who are pursuing a variety of academic disciplines have been able to participate as summer interns in Malindi, Kenya. The significance of this is that these interns aren't so much making a difference as that they are being changed themselves. Beck added, "We perceive these internships not so much as a mission, but more of a pilgrimage. A pilgrimage is about being changed. This type of experience will bring about an internal change that will make a difference no matter where the student ends up and no matter their vocation."

KENYAN WIDOWS AND ORPHANS MINISTRY

Through their church in Midland, Texas, Cherie ('79) and Terry ('81) Creech became involved in a ministry serving Kenya widows and orphans. Over time, the ministry became known as Kenya Widows and Orphans (KWO), and the Creeches began integrating LCU students, faculty, and staff into various facets of this ministry. KWO houses and feeds thousands of orphans across Kenya and provides meaningful work for many widows.

demonstrating God's love to orphans and widows

ALUMNI HEARTS STIRRED BY KENYAN CHURCHES

Over a number of years, new Christians in Kenya who became believers through the World Bible School correspondence courses became the church in rural Kenya. As these new Christians began to deepen their faith and their understanding of the Bible, they began to take very seriously the gospel call to care for widows and orphans, even though they had very scarce resources themselves.

On the other side of the globe, a small group of Christians in a different church heard about what the Kenyan brothers and sisters were doing, and a partnership began that bridged the thousands of miles in between. Seeing how these new Kenyan Christians were actively demonstrating God's love to widows and orphans, even with so little resources, this church secured funds from American Christians to meet the daily needs of the growing number of orphans who were coming to them in need, as well as to build new infrastructure to house them.

Eventually, the non-profit Kenya Widows and Orphans (KWO) became the conduit through which resources met needs.

Cherie Creech ('79), a KWO board member, along with her husband, Terry ('81) became involved with this work before KWO even existed because they were moved by the selfless love and the deep faith of these new Christians in Kenya.

"We fell in love with the story of how God used two different groups of Christians who didn't initially know about each other, and He invited us to join Him in his mission. We saw the church in Kenya giving all that they had of their scarce resources, and we loved their heart for widows and orphans. You could tell that this small church made up of new Christians was fully invested in their call of caring for others, and we wanted to be part of it," said Cherie.

Eventually more orphanages were built by KWO, each in coordination with existing churches in Kenya. KWO focuses on several varieties of ministry: housing, feeding capacity, and evangelism. Monthly monetary commitments to KWO provide for the feeding and providing basic care for widows and orphans. Other gifts fund improvement projects in infrastructure, organization, and education. True to its origins in the WBS ministry, KWO prioritizes relationships and partnerships with Kenya church communities.

President Tim Perrin and Lucy, at the entrance of an orphanage in Kenya, a ministry supported by the Kenya Widows and Orphans Ministry.

As Cherie's passion for the widows and orphans of Kenya has grown, it has also spread as she has begun to involve other LCU alumni, including her close college friend, Robyn (Baker) Rhodes ('79). Rhodes joined Cherie on a recent trip, along with LCU professors Dr. Beth Robinson and Shauna Frisbie, as they worked with the director of Kenya Medial Research Institute and former LCU med student, Dr. Willie Sang, to help determine ways to decrease the effects of trauma in the lives of the Kenyan orphans.

Over the past decade, Cherie has helped connect LCU with KWO. Many members of the LCU community have served on trips to Kenya because of the connection fostered with them. Kenyan representatives have also traveled to LCU to share their story with the campus and to participate in student events like the "Katwalk for Kenya Fashion Show," a student-led fundraising effort for KWO.

KWO also has sponsored "Camp 53" for six years, utilizing LCU students as teachers and counselors to create an uplifting and unifying experience for Kenyan youth as they graduate from high school. Because of tribal backgrounds and traditions, it is often difficult for young people to gain skills and knowledge that help them in a more global world beyond their village.

LCU students conduct classes that teach the importance of unity, the value of women, what it is to be a Godly man, and that God has called them for a purpose. Peers teaching peers has proven to be a very effective educational model for Kenyan youth.

Students who have recently been integral to Camp 53 are Kaitlyn Creel ('17), Amanda (Stephens) Masterson ('15), Dylan Whitcher ('16), Brian Brunson (senior YFM major), Mitchell Cochran (sophomore psychology and biblical text and preaching double major), and Daniel Lockhart ('18).

In response to why KWO has involved so many LCU students and has had a routine presence on campus, Cherie said, "We're trying to educate these young people to instill a passion in order to create adults who can make a difference in the future of Kenya spiritually and financially."

Because of Cherie's experiences in Kenya, she is passionate about encouraging students to make a difference through their own mission work. Becoming involved on campus and in mission trips to Kenya may inspire students to seek out opportunities in the future.

LCU PROFESSORS SEEK TREATMENT FOR KENYAN ORPHANS

Drs. Beth Robinson and Shauna Frisbee, LCU professors of psychology and counseling, knew that the physical needs of these Kenyan orphans were being met, so they were determined to see how they might help with emotional healing. What they found in the Kikitemo orphanage was that traditional treatment options were not a fit for the Kenyan culture. While their initial involvement did not begin as a research study, they solicited the help of Dr. Willie Sang, former LCU cross-country All American and Director of Kenya Medical Research Institute. Together, they are using salivary cortisol levels in the orphans to gauge the effectiveness of an innovative treatment plan.

LCU PROFESSORS SEEK WAYS TO LESSEN TRAUMA FOR KENYAN ORPHANS

A few years ago, Dr. Beth Robinson and Dr. Shauna Frisbee, both LCU professors of psychology and counseling, began working with children in an orphanage in Ecuador, with their on-site efforts in that country coming in response to a calling to help improve the mental and social health for children in those orphanages.

The two then heard about what Kenya Widows and Orphans (KWO) were doing during a presentation at LCU, when Cherie Creech ('81) brought several Kenyan guests with her to campus for a visit. One of the guests was Grace, the director at the one of the KWO orphanages. The information they gathered through subsequent meetings with Grace seemed to offer a prime opportunity to set up in Kenya something similar to their work in Ecuador.

Dr. Robinson and Dr. Frisbee soon planned a trip to Kenya. "KWO is doing a great job meeting the physical needs of the kids, so we asked, what we could do to meet emotional and mental health needs?" said Robinson.

"This didn't start as a research project," explained Frisbee. "It was initially about going to Kenya to help children at the Kikitemo orphanage heal from trauma. When we got there . . . we weren't certain that trauma treatments developed in the States would be effective in the Kenyan culture."

They met up with Dr. Willie Sang, who was a former All-American in cross-country and a pre-med student at Lubbock Christian University from 1975 to 1978. Sang, who holds a very high-ranking position in Kenya as the Director of the Kenya Medical Research Institute (KEMRI), partnered with Drs. Robinson and Frisbee. They set up a study last spring that would include Patrice Penney, a trainer for Theraplay interventions, to study the effectiveness of Theraplay on trauma symptoms of abused and neglected children in Kenya. LCU graduate student Shelly Durham Weeks ('15) also joined the team to conduct the research.

Theraplay intervention frames caregiving interactions to replicate healthy parent-child relationships – teaching caretakers to be direct, engaging, and playful with children to foster attachment and communication. The researchers will be training caretakers to utilize Theraplay in their interactions with the children. Dr. Sang will oversee the analysis and measurement of salivary cortisol samples in relation to the intervention, and the other team members will work together to determine the effectiveness of Therapy in Kenyan culture. An increase in cortisol levels in the samples would indicate a positive impact of Theraplay.

There are 60 orphans housed at Kikitemo, with 16 widows serving as caretakers. For the study, all volunteers who meet the study criteria will participate. Saliva samples will be regularly obtained and processed at KEMRI. The children will frequently be assessed on their perceived level of care to help ensure their safety throughout the study.

The full project is expected to take a year and a half, with a final report potentially available in November of 2019. If the interventions are successful, this study could be the catalyst for implementing Theraplay in orphanages all across Kenya. God's call to LCU's professors now involves multiple LCU alumni from different generations, working together to meet the needs of the hurting world.

African Missionary legacies

Many of the families already mentioned in this article have family members who are continuing the work begun by their parents.

- Gaston and Janet Tarbet have two daughters and their families who have served as missionaries in Uganda.
- All three sons of Kirk and Susan Hayes are currently in Africa, Ben and Rebecca (Evans) Hayes and Ryan and Justine Hayes serving as missionaries in Malawi, Kenya, and Ty Hayes who serves as a faculty member at Livingstone International University.
- Tim and Rebecca Tally's daughter, Elizabeth Harrison, currently works with her husband, Brian, with Pioneer Bible Translators in North Africa, after having served in Kenya and Uganda.
- Jim and Phyllis Beck have a son and daughter-in-law, Caleb and Jenny Beck, who are now serving in Rwanda.
- Ian ('87) and Danetta (Hawley) Shelburne ('88) (nephew of Kirk Hayes and son of B. and Ruth Shelburne) worked in Malawi for two years and for over a decade in Uganda with the Tylers.
- Courtney and Landon Shuman interned with Jim and Phyllis Beck and are now serving as missionaries in Dar Salaam, Tanzania.

While including many of these stories and people, we run the risk of inadvertently not acknowledging the selfless and sacrificial work of many others. This brief reflection is only a small slice of a much larger picture that illustrates how God intended for his people to work together in spreading his good news. The story of each of these lives are woven together in God's perfect timing for his ultimate glory and honor.

The 2008 Lady Chap Softball Team was inducted into the LCU Hall of Honor this August. The team finished their season with a 60-10 record and the NAIA National Championship in their inaugural season.

KENYAN RUNNERS'

COACH PRICE AND LCU

Darrell Price never dreamed he would be coaching cross-country at LCU, but his willingness to take a step in faith helped guide the program not only to a dynasty of national championships, but also to one of spiritual transformation and character.

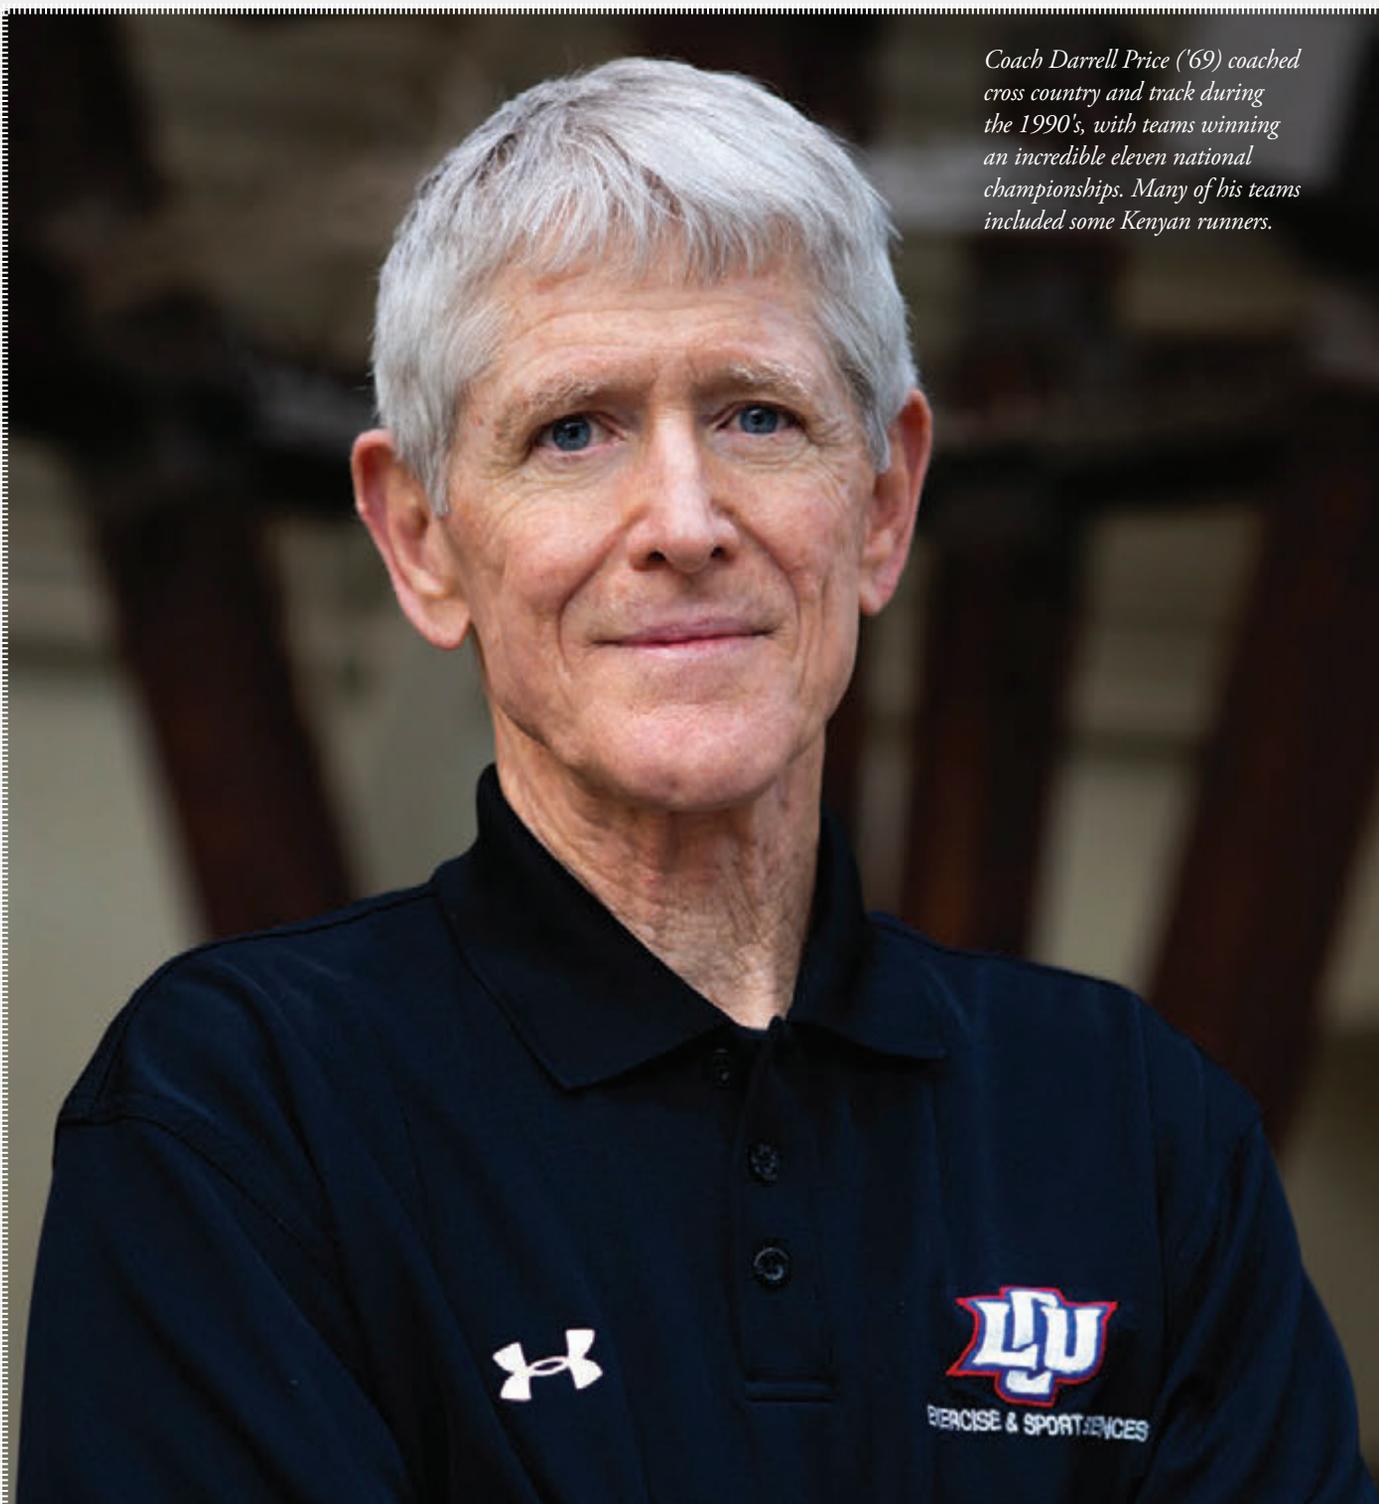

Price had lived in Lubbock helping coach basketball at LCU for seven years, working his way up to head coach at the age of 26. After nearly a decade of different jobs that led Price as far away as Houston, LCU athletic director and head basketball coach John Copeland gave Darrell a call, asking him to go in a new direction.

“They’d had a coaching change in the track and cross-country area—one in which I’d had no experience—but he had worked with me, we knew each other,” Price shared. “I think he was more interested in finding someone who knew what LCU was all about. Coaching is coaching.” After prayer and deliberation, he decided to take the job.

Early on, Price had the help of a mentor from South Plains College. “James Morris was a Christian guy, a lot older than me, who had been the head coach over there for a long time. He helped me overcome a pretty great learning curve,” he recalled. “Thankfully, you can become an expert in just about anything in a couple of years if you just apply yourself.” Coming to the sport with fresh eyes also helped Price develop his coaching style. “I was able to form my own philosophy. I didn’t have a lot of background in the sport, but that ended up being a positive. I’d seen a lot of ways of doing things, and I just took those and adapted it to what we needed for LCU.”

GOD'S PROVIDENCE

HE SCHEDULED AN APPOINTMENT WITH ME WHEN HE FINALLY GOT HERE, AND I HAD NO IDEA WHAT HE WOULD WANT TO TALK ABOUT. AS IT TURNED OUT, HE ASKED ME FOR SPIRITUAL ENCOURAGEMENT, SITTING RIGHT ACROSS FROM ME.

When Price took over the program, there were two Kenyans on the team—one was the son of Kip Keino, two-time Olympic gold medalist for distance running. The other, Peter Biwott, started the semester late, Price recalled. “He scheduled an appointment with me when he finally got here, and I had no idea what he would want to talk about. As it turned out, he asked me for spiritual encouragement, sitting right across from me.” Price was genuinely surprised. “It was amazing—that was the beginning of a story that I could never have made up or dreamed of the part that I’d play. There was so much of God’s providence in that year.” After some weeks of Bible study, Price baptized Peter, and they shared a close relationship.

Peter was from the Kalenjin tribe in Kenya, famous for producing many elite runners—a fact that was completely unknown to Price at that time. Through the first two years that he coached, his teams performed at an average level, he recalled. In that third year, Peter brought his coach to Albuquerque to meet some influential individuals from his home country. “It turned out that some of them had run for Division I schools like Washington state, and Peter wanted to help bring some athletes to our program. I was in a room that, if you were from that running sub-culture, either in the states or worldwide, you probably would have been in awe of who was there and what they had accomplished.”

Price shared that there was a young man there who was a brother to Ibrahim Hussein, who had won the Boston

Marathon three times in 1988, 1991, and 1992, who was running at South Plains College, just down the road from LCU. Mbarak Hussein was being recruited by many high-ranking Division I running programs, but Ibrahim was in that room with Price in Albuquerque, and after talking to Peter about the atmosphere and environment at LCU, decided that his brother needed to continue his education there.

“It was simply because of the environment. He had been at New Mexico State, which is a good school, but in those programs, the coaches didn’t have much of a relationship with their kids. It simply wasn’t as important as winning. Nobody believed that Hussein would come over here,” Price added, “but he did—in that third year he showed up.”

During that same summer, Peter decided to bring Price to Kenya, as well—but this trip had nothing to do with running. “Peter wanted to preach in Kenya,” Price explained. “So I took him to a preaching school there.”

“I never went to Kenya to recruit,” he added. “I had a file full of names, but many of the athletes there couldn’t do the academic work. They were very talented, but they were desperate to get out and get to the States. I needed to have a person with character, who was also a good student and a good athlete. If you took one of those out, it wouldn’t be what was best for them or for the program.”

To Price’s surprise, when he and Peter arrived in the parking lot of the preaching school in Nairobi, he was met by five families, all a part of a mission team, who had heard that he was coming with an LCU graduate. “I didn’t even know anyone would know that I was there, and they had driven over mountain ranges to find me.” The mission team told him that they wanted to start a Christian boarding school there in the middle of the part of Kenya that Peter was from, and they needed someone with an education to be the headmaster. “It was absolutely providential,” Price said. “Peter became the headmaster there for the next five or six years.”

While Price was in the country, those families introduced him to a young man who wanted to run at LCU, named James Bungei, whom they believed would be a good fit at LCU. Price heeded their recommendation, and that fall Bungei joined Mbarak Hussein and Derek Kite—a runner from California who had been one of the top high school distance runners in the country—as the new additions to the team, alongside program veterans David Kogo and Paul Rotich.

“I didn’t know how good they were going to be,” Price recalled, “but we didn’t lose a race that year.” That team traveled all over the country, including a victorious meet at the University of Arkansas, the team that would go on to win the Division I national championship. They won every meet on the way to the NAIA national championship, in which they defeated seven-time defending champions saw. “I baptized 17 runners over those years,” he recalled. Some were Kenyan, some were American, but Price reflected humbly on the impact that he had on those lives. “I think a lot of changes were taking place in me, as far as seeing what Christ wanted me to do through my life... It’s really all about relationships, talking about what matters.

It takes a lot of pressure off,” Price explained, “when winning isn’t part of your identity. When you know who you are, what your purpose is, and you see things in a more eternal perspective—you can enjoy whatever you’re a part of. You can be blessed by those things, instead of serving them.”

---

“WHEN WINNING ISN’T PART OF YOUR IDENTITY. WHEN YOU KNOW WHO YOU ARE, WHAT YOUR PURPOSE IS, AND YOU SEE THINGS IN A MORE ETERNAL PERSPECTIVE—YOU CAN ENJOY WHATEVER YOU’RE A PART OF. YOU CAN BE BLESSED BY THOSE THINGS, INSTEAD OF SERVING THEM.”

Adams State College as an unranked team. The experience was made even more exceptional when James Bungei won the individual championship—the first of four consecutive that he would achieve during his time at LCU.

That season sparked a run of eight consecutive years that LCU won the cross-country national championship, including Bungei’s four individual titles, followed by two more by runner Simeon Sawe. Hussein and Bungei both graduated as Academic All-Americans, Price noted proudly.

Even more important than the titles, as far as Price is concerned, were the spiritual successes that the program

Dr. Willie Sang, a longtime friend of LCU and high-ranking medical professional in Kenya, ran cross-country at LCU under Coach Hugh Rhodes prior to Price’s tenure, but ended up forging a strong friendship with Price, helping connect him with continuing work in Kenya throughout his life.

“LCU’s environment was really powerful for that,” Price added. “We had a lot of people on campus, who, as they do for any student, took an interest in their lives, especially in their spiritual lives.” He is still good friends with many of those runners—a testament to the powerful relationship they share that goes far beyond the running and the titles—rooted in what truly matters.

Dr. Willie Sang, Director of Kenya Medical Research Institute, is currently a high-ranking medical professional in Kenya who is also helping connect current mission efforts and assisting with research being done by LCU professors Dr. Beth Robinson and Dr. Shauna Frisbee. # CAMPUS MONUMENT

POINTS TO

Prayer

On November 4, 2018, Malori (Maddox) Rogers ('17) returned to campus to speak in chapel and with her family to dedicate a monument acknowledging the power of prayer. The dedication ceremony was almost three years to the day since her life took a difficult turn, as she was rushed to a Wichita Falls hospital to combat a life-threatening brain bleed on November 10, 2015.

When word of Malori's condition spread that night, her fellow students, faculty, and staff met at the Fountains on the Mall and knelt in prayer, petitioning God on her behalf. It was an unforgettable night for the LCU community and for the Maddox family – a night full of God's providence at every turn.

Malori spoke in chapel before the dedication of the prayer stone, along with her parents – Sarah and Marray, sister – Macy, brother, Peyton, and former coach from her years on the LCU volleyball team – Jennifer Lawrence.

Prayer drastically impacted Malori's life over the past three years – both by the power in prayers from others and the peace found in her own prayers.

Lawrence introduced Malori to the student body, emphasizing her spiritual sense of purpose. “I really want you to know who Malori is... Malori is servant-hearted and spirit-led,” she said. “She influences others by reflecting the love of Christ. She continues following the Lord in the unknown. She will never understand the influence she has had on me and many others because of the way she’s allowed the Lord to use her.”

Malori began her chapel presentation with a show of gratitude to LCU – to the professors, to the students, and the community:

“Everyone here is incredible, and this is such a special place,” Malori said. “LCU just keeps getting better and better, just like President Perrin’s arms keep getting longer and longer. LCU is awesome!”

Malori calls herself an “introvert who was #exposed,” but she wants to share the struggles for others who may be able to relate or be able to learn. As Lawrence said, Malori places her story in God’s hands so that He might use it to influence those who witness it.

“No matter what’s happening – if your brain doesn’t work, if you can’t do anything right – it’s okay; tap into the Spirit inside of you,” Malori said. “As amazing as it is to have a miracle happen to you, I have walked in the valleys of anxiety and turmoil trying to understand it, trying to pay God back, trying to pay people back, and other such foolishness.”

Her experiences since that day have drastically changed Malori’s way of thinking. For all the joyful moments, there have also been difficult struggles – through therapy, physical struggles, and mental obstacles. She strives to give God the glory in all things. She finds herself grateful for small moments. She tries to find peace in living her life. Malori explained, “I used to think that to be anything significant, I needed to be doing; or making money; or something that I could label as productive. I’m learning how to just be. After all, we are human beings, not human doings. Now I’m finding joy in dreaming small.”

Prayer drastically impacted Malori’s life over the past three years – both by the power in prayers from others and the peace found in her own prayers.

The prayer stone, inscribed with Matthew 19:26, was placed by the Fountains on the Mall at LCU, where many members of the LCU and local community had once met to pray for Malori as soon as they heard about her brain bleed. The stone serves as a reminder that prayer is powerful, especially when people gather in community in the name of the Lord.

The inscription on the stone includes a message from the Maddox family, Pete and Sharon Hanks (Malori’s grandparents), and LCU Volleyball:

“Lubbock Christian University is forever deep in our hearts, overflowing with love and gratitude. Thank you for every single prayer for Malori Maddox, which started here at this fountain on November 10, 2015. God is good all the time!” The last line has been a long-time mantra for the Maddox family, and it has only become more meaningful as they have journeyed through storms, trials, and healing of Malori’s journey.

JERRY HARRIS RETIRES

AS CHAIR OF THE LCU BOARD OF TRUSTEES

By L. Timothy Perrin

In the course of LCU's first sixty years, the university's board of trustees has been blessed by the faithful service of only four chairmen—Paul Sherrod, the founding chair who served for eight years, followed by Lennis Baker (1964-78), Gene Hancock (1978-98) and Jerry Harris (1998-2018). At the board's regular meeting in September of 2018, Mr. Harris announced that the time was right for him to step aside while continuing his service as a member of the Board.

I was privileged to serve as president for more than six years under Jerry's leadership and to witness up close his devotion to Lubbock Christian University and his Christ-centered servant leadership. Jerry often repeated the John Maxwell quote that everything rises and falls with leadership and LCU was lifted up because of his extraordinary and transformative service to the university. He believed in the power of prayer and LCU board meetings consisted of lots of time in prayer offered on behalf of the university and all those who were part of the LCU family.

"My prayer for the university has always been for us to recruit and train students to be educated in such a way that they are successful, not as the world defines success, but as God defines success," said Jerry Harris.

Jerry's professional life revolves around the cotton industry as the owner of King Mesa Cotton Gin in Lamesa, Texas.

He is respected by all for his deep experience in the world of agriculture and is a leader in West Texas and beyond. His advice and counsel are sought by elected officials and agricultural experts alike. He is defined by his faith and he and Nelda are active members of the Lamesa Church of Christ.

Dr. L. Ken Jones who served as LCU's president under Jerry for fourteen years describes his former chair as a person of humility and faith. He says: "Jerry's greatest strengths are his humility, faith, and willingness to serve as many as possible. God blesses those types of leaders and those they lead. Thus, God has wonderfully blessed LCU because of the leadership of Jerry Harris."

Jerry's impact on the university is difficult to measure. He led the board through a time of significant growth and expansion for the university. He shepherded the board through several significant transitions, including the selection of a president to succeed Dr. L. Ken Jones. Among many other noteworthy contributions, Jerry's most significant was likely his leadership of the university through the successful sale of the Hancock Land Application and Water facility to the City of Lubbock. Dr. Jones, who was president at the time, recalls: "The negotiation was difficult and long. Jerry used his political connections, deep knowledge of agricultural land, and his skill as a deal maker to bring a great conclusion to the sale. The result came at a critical time to place LCU on a track to a much better and sustainable financial picture."

Harris commented, "I believe we have experienced some great momentum over the years, but the credit for all those successes goes to our God who provides every good thing and to the great women and men who serve as the faculty and staff of the university. It has been my great honor to serve the board of trustees as chair, and I look forward to working as an active member for the future."

Jerry and his wife Nelda have given so generously and freely of their time, their resources, and their wisdom to the LCU community. They have three granddaughters who are current students at LCU. Jerry has participated in dozens of graduations, employee appreciation dinners, board meetings and other LCU events. He has done it all with a smile and a word of wisdom. He leaves a wonderful example for all to follow.

TRUSTEE LEADERSHIP

At its September 2018 meeting, the board of trustees selected Terry Creech to serve as the fifth chair of the LCU Board of Trustees. Terry ('81) and his wife Cherie ('79) are both LCU alumni and Terry is the first alumnus to hold the position of chair. Terry and Cherie live in Midland, Texas, and they are active members at the Golf Course Road Church of Christ. Terry graduated from LCU in 1981 with a degree in accounting. He and Cherie have two children — Kristin Moyer [and husband Mike], and Katelyn Creech, and two grandchildren — Preston and Emma.

George Lamberth ('68) serves as the vice chair of the board of trustees. Lamberth has been a member of the LCU board since 1991, and he serves as an elder of the Legacy Church of Christ in North Richland Hills, TX. He is married to Sharri and resides in Colleyville.

Melisa Roberts ('84) is the secretary/treasurer of the board. Melisa is part of the senior leadership team at Lone Star State Bank and worships at South Plains Church of Christ. She is married to Steve and resides in Lubbock.

LEAVING A LEGACY

THE TRUE MEANING OF LIFE IS TO PLANT TREES, UNDER WHOSE SHADE YOU DO NOT EXPECT TO SIT.

-Nelson Henderson

B. R. "Rip" Griffin became a member of the Lubbock Christian University Board of Trustees in 1975, serving the university with dedication and distinction for 42 years. He provided leadership and counsel to the board, as well as five LCU presidents.

Dr. Ken Jones, fifth president of LCU, considered Griffin a dear friend. "Rip Griffin was a courageous, strong, and generous man with a tender heart," said Jones. "It is more than fitting that 'The Rip Griffin Center' bears his name as a tribute to his life contribution to our university." The Griffin family has a long history of generosity toward the university, which includes an estate gift.

"He has been a key part of the university's growth and development and his legacy will live on at LCU for many generations to come," said LCU President Tim Perrin. "We give thanks for the Rip Griffin Center that bears his name and for all the ways, large and small, known and unknown, that he provided vital support and leadership to the university."

DR. B. WAYNE HINDS

Dr. B. Wayne Hinds, founding faculty member who served Lubbock Christian University for more than 40 years, passed away Oct. 16, 2018.

Dr. Hinds joined the university in the role of music department chairman in 1957. He founded the A Cappella Chorus in 1957 and directed the chorus for over forty years until he retired in 1998. He also founded the Royal Blue Band; Meistersingers Chorus, which he directed until 1960; and formed the Music Masters, which performed and produced Master Follies until that responsibility shifted to the Inter-Club Council.

Dr. Hinds's legacy extends beyond his influences in the music department and with performing groups. Together in 1957, he and his wife, Yvonne, composed the university alma mater – he wrote the music, and she wrote the lyrics.

The Hinds spent hours in and out of the classroom during his 41 years of service to the university: preparing for concerts in daily rehearsals, showcasing students and choruses by traveling the United States, and orchestrating more than twenty-five choral mission trips abroad. He and Yvonne, known affectionately as “Mama Hinds,” made a significant impact on the students and university to which they dedicated their lives.

“Dr. Hinds was highly instrumental in making sure music served at the core of the university identity,” said Dr. Laurie Doyle, professor of fine arts. “His years of travel with the chorus recruited for and advertised the new college in a tremendous way. He worked with hundreds of students over the years and inspired their love of music, their dedication to the university, and their faithful belief in the power of Christian fellowship.”

In 2017, the Hinds received the 60th Anniversary Enduring Legacy Award for leading by Christian example, an example that lives on at the university. The alma mater remains unchanged since its composition, still including the original lyrics about “modern pioneers,” the university's original mascot. Additionally, many of the choral traditions created by Dr. Hinds continue in the musical programs led by Dr. Philip Camp, professor of music and director of choirs.

“Dr. Wayne Hinds was a tremendous inspiration to thousands of students and alumni during the early history of Lubbock Christian College and continued to inspire many beyond his retirement in 1997 through the Hallelujah Chorus and through the various alumni chorus gatherings and concerts,” said Camp. “With Mama Hinds by his side throughout their experiences, they truly exemplified Christ in their marriage.”

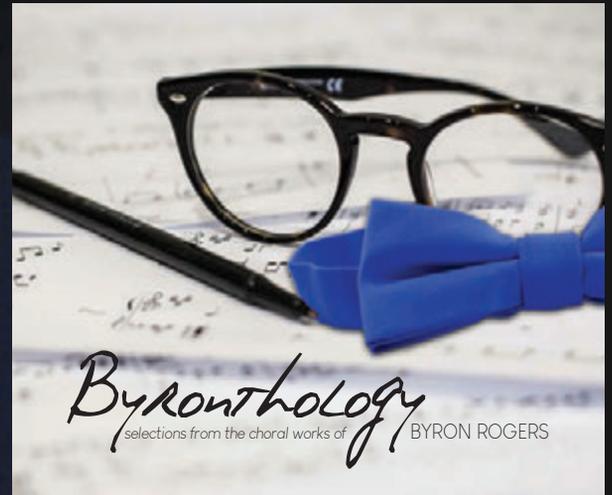

The Hinds family has requested that donations be made to the Dr. B. Wayne Hinds Endowed Scholarship fund at LCU.

The latest album release of the LCU Choirs features selected choral works by Dr. Byron Rogers, ('81)
